Forewords

Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa is a mature work on the Bhakti cult and Advaita Vedānta. The glory of Bhakti has been established at every step. Rāma is not only Brahma but something more—above and beyond; omnipotent, omnipresent and omniscient; the cause without cause and one without the second. The factors that caused Him to incarnate Himself in a human guise were several but the main theme was only one as declared by Lord Kṛṣṇa in Gītā—

यदा यदा हि धर्मस्य ग्लानिर्भवति भारत।
 अभ्युत्थानमधर्मस्य तदात्मानं सृजाम्यहम्॥
 परित्राणाय साधूनां विनाशाय च दुष्कृताम्।
 धर्मसंस्थापनार्थाय सम्भवामि युगे युगे॥

So the atrocities by Rāvaṇa, solicitation by Brahmā, austere penances of Kaśyapa with a desire to have Mahā Viṣṇu as his son—all materialised at a ripe moment and resulted in the incarnation of Rāma in the Raghu dynasty of Kosala with Ayodhya their capital.

Purpose of Composing—

Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa is a Puranic work following the Puranic style in every way. Even though it does not come true on the criteria of Purāṇas as 'सर्ग, प्रतिसर्ग' etc., the necessary elements we do not find in it yet in all essentialities it is a Purāṇa. The inquisitiveness of Pārvatī and explicit discourses by Mahādeva.

Mark it, it does not commence with 'सूत उवाच'. Does it mean that it is an Agamic composition like all other Tantricist literature? But we are not concerned with this angle and moreover it requires considerable research. The main question is—"Why Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa when Vālmīki was already there?" In my humble opinion there might have been two reasons—

(1) There were several Purāṇas covering the main incarnations of the Lord and they narrated in short Rāma Kathā also but there was no Rāma Purāṇa as such exclusively dealing with Rāma. That was something really strange.

(2) The purpose was not narrating Rāma Kathā but propounding the ideological principles of Bhakti and its co-ordination with Vedānta—particularly Advaita Vedānta. This is why it is named as Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa. Otherwise it could have been called Vyāsa Rāmāyaṇa on the pattern of Vālmīki-Rāmāyaṇa.

Authorship—

The authorship of Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa conventionally goes to Vedavyāsa and there is no reason to disown this belief particularly when we accept the fact that Purāṇas were all authored by Vyāsa and we have no means to either corroborate or reject his authorship.

The age of Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa—

It is a most debatable and controversial point. According to traditional thinking Parīkṣit heard Bhāgavata Mahāpurāṇa from Śukadeva, the son of Vyāsa. Parīkṣit inherited the kingdom from Yudhiṣṭhira who happened to be in the end of Dvāpara e.g., 3101 B.C. It means that the Yudhiṣṭhira Samvat at present is 5099. Parīkṣit might have heard Bhāgavata some 5000 years before. We find a mention of Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa in Bhāgavata (XII.13.8). So Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa must be older than Bhāgavata. Now the Puṣpikā of Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa Māhātmya—"इति श्रीब्रह्माण्डपुराणे उत्तरखण्डेऽध्यात्मरामायणमाहात्म्यं सम्पूर्णम्।" It means that the time of Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa may be some 4000 years

B. C. Mahābhārata says—"इतिहासपुराणाभ्यां वेदं समुपबृंहयेत्" which may mean that Mahābhārata and its author both were familiar with the existence of Purāṇas. But the question is if the Mahābhārata is referring to the same 'इतिहास' and 'पुराण' which we take them to be or they were some other works. At present to us 'इतिहास' means Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki and Mahābhārata of Vyāsa.

But in Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa while Rāma was prepared to go to the forest Sītā insists for accompanying Him and putting arguments says—

रामायणानि बहुशः श्रुतानि बहुभिर्द्विजैः ॥

सीतां विना वनं रामो गतः किं कुत्रचिद्बद।

(A.R. Ayo. IV. 77-77 1/2)

Sītā is very emphatic—"You have heard so many Rāmāyaṇas from so many Brahmins. But have you ever heard Rāma going to forest without Sītā?" Of course she must have been referring to the happenings of other Kalpas.

Tulasīdāsa in his Rāmacaritamānasa refers to Rāmāyaṇas in 'सतकोटि' number. Then as a matter of principle and analogy both, can the same not be said about Purāṇas? If yes, then a number of Vyāsas being in existence also cannot be ruled out. Even today every Kathā Vācaka on a pulpit is called a Vyāsa. In ancient days also right from Sūta to Vaiśampāyana, there was a chain of Vyāsas.

Then the very word Purāṇa means not just old but very ancient. So can it not be concluded that Purāṇas were already there from the time immemorial and from time to time or say—in every Kalpa and Yuga some Vyāsa systematized those Puranic narrations?

If we look into it from modern, western or rational angles as you may call it, these works are modern—say 6th to 8th century A. D. While making a thorough combing internally for substantial proofs, we will certainly find certain good indicators and they are many in number.

(1) Bhakti is one of the points which Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa laid most emphasis upon. Śaraṇāgati, ninefold Bhakti etc., are later developments in chronological order. Even Vālmīki says about Rāma that 'even if once, somebody says to Rāma—"I am yours, " He removes all his fears from all quarters." But in Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa exposition of Bhakti principle, is more technical which indicates maturity of Bhakti cult at the time.

(2) 'Vedānta' and its elaborate explanations are the other speciality that draws our attention. On occasions there are verbatim extracts of Gītā. So Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa must be a post Gītā work. It has heavily based on Brahma Sūtras which are post Buddhistic compositions as Buddhistic principles are criticised in it. The arguments and counter arguments are so mature as it was never seen before the advent of Śaṅkarācārya, we must always remember that the word Vedānta has never been used in the sense of Upaniṣads but only in the sense of Advaita Vedānta.

(3) The terms 'चिदाभास' etc., are still more modern in reference to antiquity.

Two dubitable words—

There are two words 'दीनार' and 'देवर' used in Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa—'दीनार' once and 'देवर' twice. Their origin, even though they both appear in Amara Koṣa, is doubtful. The very look of 'दीनार' tells that it is a semetic word. No historical proof is available that 'दीनार' ever was an Indian coin in currency. The Western lexicons are of the opinion that it is derived from Latin 'Denarius' and Sanskrit grammarian Bhaṭṭojī Dīkṣita proves 'दीनार' to have derived from Sanskrit verb. 'दीनार' and 'देवर' both found place in Siddhānta Kaumudī Uṇādi chapter. But there looks a very strange thing that Pāṇini in his Aṣṭādhyāyī passed a very sweeping remark regarding Uṇādi. He composed only one Sūtra 'उणादयो बहुलम्' (III. 3. 1). That is all, He did not say anything about all the 748 Uṇādi Sūtras nor did he include them if they did exist in his time.

It is quite reasonable to think that Pāṇini accommodated all the words and usages of his time. By the same token it can safely be concluded that the entire Uṇādi chapter is a post Pāṇini addendum to the neo-Sanskrit grammar or more correctly to say Vyākaraṇa. It means that they might have been composed in between Pāṇini and Bhaṭṭojī Dīkṣita (16th century A. D.).

There is another factor that draws our attention. In Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa the narration emerges from Śrī Mahādeva and explained to Bhagavatī Pārvatī. That is very different from the Puranic structure where the narrator is invariably Sūta or Śaunaka. Even in Mahābhārata the narrator is Vaiśampāyana whereas in all the Agamic books it is Lord Śiva who narrates the Kathā or propounds the philosophical principles. Same is the case with the Tantra literature also. On the other hand it differs in its style from Vālmīki-Rāmāyaṇa also. In his Rāmāyaṇa Vālmīki did not follow the pattern of dialogue between two or more characters or between the narrator and questioner. Vālmīki assumed his responsibility of being the narrator—a pattern followed by the later classicist epic poets.

From the above discussion a number of controversial points arrive. The foremost among them is about Dvaipāyana Vyāsa and if he has even done any compilation of any Agamic or Tantric work. He is popularly known as the super compiler of Nigamic and Puranic literature only. However it is orthodox belief that Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa was composed by Vyāsa and the author of these lines does not want to indulge himself in an undesirable debate.

About editing and translating—

It seems quite reasonable to explain our position regarding the editing and translating of the present venture. We have had a few different editions of the book before us. Since there are hundreds of apparently grammatical discrepancies or to be a little conservative—violation of etymological rules, we had to grope very cautiously and scrupulously our way. Wherever we came across different versions of a particular word in different editions we accepted the form which looked grammatically correct. But on the other places where we were not left any choice, we adopted the same version, even though we thought it was a grammatical error on the part of some persons in the past. We leave it to our scholarly readers to decide if we did it right or wrong.

Translation—

The very nature of translating is difficult and tedious. It becomes more so when the translator is faced with a philosophical text like Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa and more particularly Rāma Gītā or Rāma Hṛdaya. The real translation should accommodate each and every word of the original text and at the same time must observe the rules and dictum of the translating language. But such translations had their own demerits also. They lack in the fluency and appreciability. In this sense of the word we have not rendered translation—rather we have given the meaning of the couplets. It is just possible that on occasions some word or words might have been omitted in the course of translating but I am sure that meaning and spirit of the text has been faithfully preserved.

While translating the philosophically delicate portions, we tried to explain the fundamental principles following the norms and standards of the particular school of thought.

I dedicate my heart felt thanks to the Lord almighty Śrī Rāma, the Maryādā Puruṣottama, who made us instrumental to serve his purpose and who gave inspiration and courage to undertake this great venture. Further more I dedicate all our shortcomings, omissions and commissions in the lotus feet of the same almighty Rāma the only support of the feeble and weak. Without his grace we could not have undertaken such a hazardous venture. Secondly we express our gratitude to the editorial staff of Kalyana-Kalpataru without whose active co-operation it could not have been possible to bring out the book in its present form. I further extend my gratitude to the Gita Press and its staff particularly proof-reading and composing who put in enormous labour to make the book of its worth. And lastly we express our gratitude to our scholarly readers and contributors to whom this book is presented. It is they who will decide whether we have succeeded or failed in our present venture.

Vālmiki-Rāmāyaṇa and Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa

—Prof. Siddheshwar Prasad
(Governor of Tripura)

Vālmiki-Rāmāyaṇa is known as Ādi Kāvya. It was composed by Maharṣi Vālmiki who is, naturally, known as Ādi Kavi. It means that there was no poet or no poetry before Vālmiki and his Rāmāyaṇa.

Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa was written long after the Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmiki. Dr. Vijayaśri in her thesis on Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa has come to the conclusion that it was written by Swāmī Rāmānanda. Swāmī Rāmānanda is known as a great devotee of Śrī Rāma. He was a 'Bhakta'. Therefore, naturally, Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa is a 'Bhakti Kāvya'.

Swāmī Rāmānanda lived in the 14th century A.D. Perhaps he was born in the beginning of the 14th century. Naturally, the Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa became a popular text book in the followers of the Rāma Bhakti Mārga.

Vālmiki was basically a poet and Rāmānanda primarily a Bhakta. Tulasīdāsa was both a poet and a Bhakta. The differences in their nature and attitude delineated the basic features of their compositions. Vālmiki's Rāma is, no doubt, an incarnation of Viṣṇu. But as an 'Avatāra' he leads a life of a man howsoever distinguished he may be. Rāma of Rāmānanda leads the life of not a man but as an 'Avatāra'. Therefore, Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa gives the message of 'Bhakti' and 'Bhakti' and nothing else.

Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, on the other hand, is an Ārṣa Kāvya. Ārṣa Kāvya, both the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata, always presented life of man in all its varieties, subtleties, complexes, visions, dreams and failures. Both were 'Puruṣārtha Kāvya'. Puruṣārtha is not only 'Mokṣa' and Puruṣārtha is not only Bhakti. Mokṣa and Bhakti may be the highest in the series. But 'Puruṣārtha' means all the four—'Dharma', 'Artha', 'Kāma' and 'Mokṣa'. Therefore, 'Ādi Kāvya' could not view life in a singular capsule of Mokṣa or Bhakti or renunciation.

Why God is Great? It is for the protection of 'Dharma' and destruction of 'Adharma'. Therefore, His Avatāra, His Līlā must incorporate all his activities in fullness and also so vividly that the common man does not lose faith in the ultimate victory of Dharma. This is what Vālmīki has done.

Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa is impatient. It has no time to wait, no kind of struggle, no wish and will to struggle. It depends fully on the compassion of God. Therefore, although Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa was very popular in the followers of the Bhakti Mārga of Rāmānanda, it never became popular as a Kāvya. It was the singular distinction of Vālmīki-Rāmāyaṇa that it was esteemed equally high by the devotees as well as the general readers. Therefore, the influence of Vālmīki on Indian culture was so wide and deep that it has always been regarded as one of the pillars of Indian culture and tradition.

In between the Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki and the Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa of Rāmānanda, Vasiṣṭha Rāmāyaṇa was also composed. Generally, it is believed that it was also composed by Ādi Kavi Vālmīki. It is just like believing that the composer of the Mahābhārata and the Bhāgawata Purāṇa is one and the same. But, as everybody knows, Bhāgawata Purāṇa was written in the medieval period, a few centuries before the Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa. The Rāmāyaṇa known as Vasiṣṭha Rāmāyaṇa is also a Kāvya which is basically philosophical in nature. Therefore, although it is traditionally popular in the 'Sādhakas' it was never a popular Kāvya like the Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki. India is very vast and has varied cultural and literary traditions. It has always maintained and nurtured plants and flowers of different varieties, colours and tests. Therefore, naturally, various variations, varieties and traditions of Rāma Kāvya have been flourishing here not only in Sanskrit but in all the other Indian languages since centuries. Even now Rāma is the pet subject of poets, novelists, story writers, philosophers, thinkers, dramatists, essayists and also a popular subject for folklores and folksongs.

When the TV serial of Rāmāyaṇa was shown, it proved that the Rāmāyaṇa and the Rāma Kathā are still the most popular subjects for all types of viewers in India and abroad. It is because in spite of so many millennia He is still the most ideal and popular icon in the minds of the people. He is still the enchanter, He is still the Rakṣaka of Dharma and destroyer of Adharma. He is still the 'Maryādā Puruṣottama' in every walk of life.

Salutations to Him—Dakṣiṇāmūrti, who is beyond the approach of the authenticating testimonies like direct perception (प्रत्यक्ष) etc., beyond the three modes of matter, untainted, knowledge embodied and who is not a subject of mind and speech etc. (1) Sūta said—Once Nārada, the Yogī while moving around all the spheres in order to shower his mercy upon others, reached Satyaloka. (2) There he saw the four-mouthed Brahmā surrounded by personified Vedas, being eulogised again and again by the Munis like Mārkaṇḍeya etc., accompanied by the Goddess Sarasvatī, illuminating the meeting-hall through his lustre like that of the morning sun, possessing all possible knowledge of all subjects, the bestower of the desires to his devotees and the lord of universe. Nārada, the best among sages prostrated himself with devotion and praised. (3—5) The self-born Lord Brahmā quite pleased, asked the Muni—the best among the Vaiṣṇavas—"What do you wish to ask? Now there is only one thing which I desire to hear from you, O highest among gods! If you are pleased with me, kindly tell me that secret also. (8) When the terrible Kali-age will come, the men will become devoid of virtues, indulge in evil conduct and turn their face back from truthfulness. (9) They will engage themselves in scandalising others, coveting possession of others' wealth, mentally they will be infatuated with others' wives and engaged in inflicting injury upon others. (10) Those ignorant persons will identify the Self with the body, will be atheists and possessing beastly tendencies, will be inimical to the parents, henpecked and subservient to their lustful desires. (11) Brāhmaṇas will be greedy and earn their livelihood by selling knowledge of Vedas, only earning money will be the sole aim of their studies and will be blinded by the pride of (scholarliness). (12) The Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas will abandon their prescribed professions and will be mostly deceitful and will certainly abandon their own Dharma. (13) Likewise will act Śūdras also. Some of them will adopt Brahminical conducts. Ladies also will generally be fallen and they will become recklessly disrespectful to their husbands and fearless. (14) Undoubtedly they will be malicious to their father-in-law. How would the next world be happy for those women of perverted sense? This question always haunts my mind. Kindly tell me some short and easy measure leading to the betterment of their next world as you know everything.(15-16).

Hearing such ejaculations of the sage, Lord Brahmā seated on the lotus, made a reply, "A good question you have put, O sage. Hearken respectfully to what I am going to tell you. (17) In the time of yore once Pārvatī with motherly affection to devotees, enquired of Lord Śiva, the destroyer of three cities (त्रिपुर) with all humility, about Rāmatattva, herself eager to know it. (18) Then Lord Śiva himself disclosed in detail to his beloved spouse the secret now known as Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa, the best among Purāṇas. (19) The universal mother Pārvatī worshipping it day and night, contemplating over it now remains constantly absorbed in Supreme Bliss. (20) When that Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa fortunately for the worldly beings, will be propagated in the world, people will get beatitude only by studying it. (21) The great sins like Brahmahatyā etc., will remain in the world until the Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa has manifested itself. (22) The Kaliyuga will remain buoyant and fearless until the Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa appears. (23) The brave Yamadūtas will be ranging fearlessly until the Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa is revealed in the world. (24) All the scriptural debates will continue and the real nature of Rāma will remain incomprehensible even for the great souls, until the Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa gets revealed in the world. (25-26)

O great sage, I am unable to fully describe the fruits of chanting and listening Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa. (27) However its glory to a certain extent, O sinless one! I will tell you. Listen attentively. Lord Śiva told me long long ago. (28) From the Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa, if one reads with devotion even one verse or the half, he instantly gets purged of all sins. (29) He who single-mindedly and with devotion recites according to his capacity, this Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa, will become liberated even in his mortal coil. (30) He who worships Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa vigilantly and with devotion everyday, gets the fruit of horse sacrifice (Yajña), O sage! (31) He who even irregularly hears Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa, that too without paying proper respect, also gets rid of all sins. (32) He who bows his head before Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa in the close vicinity, gets fruit of worshipping all gods; there is no doubt in it. (33) Now listen to what fruits he gets who scribes Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa in copy books and donates it to the devotees of Rāma. (34) The result which cannot be attained by studying Vedas or analytically explaining the Śāstras, can easily be attained by such a person. (35) The devotee of Rāma, the best among men, who on the day of Ekādaśī observing fast, explains Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa before a gathering. O best among the Vaishnavites, listen the virtuous result of that deed: I will tell you. Such a person will earn the virtue from every letter of Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa as obtained from the Purāścaraṇa of Gāyatrī. (36-37)

Now I am going to tell you what virtuous fruits one gets who recites or hears Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa singlemindedly while observing fast on Rāma Navamī and keeping awake during night. (38) What merit is achieved by giving charity equal to one's own self on the occasions of total solar eclipse in all the holy places like Kurukshetra, many a time, to the Brāhmaṇas equal in stature to Vyāsa, can be decidedly achieved through Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa, there is no doubt. (39-40) Who happily chants Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa day and night, even gods including Indra await orders from him. (41) Who recites Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa everyday regularly whatever good deeds he does, gets multiplied a crore times. (42) He who recites Śrī Rāma Hṛdaya—a portion of Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa with all attention becomes sanctified within three days even if he is a killer of a Brāhmaṇa. (43) He who makes mental recitations of Śrī Rāma Hṛdaya thrice a day before the image of Hanumān, gets all his desires fulfilled. (44) The recitation of Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa made near a Tulasī plant or a Pīpala tree, destroys sins even of Brahmahatyā with every letter. (45) The glory of Śrī Rāma Gītā is fully known to Lord Śiva only. Half of that Bhagavatī Pārvatī knows and even half of that I know, O sage! (46)

So, I am telling you some of it because I am unable to describe all. By knowing it, a person gets his heart instantly sanctified. (47) The sins which Rāma Gītā is unable to destroy can nowhere and never be destroyed by any holy pilgrimage in the world. Even though I try to find out a remedial measure for that but I fail to see one. (48) Lord Rāma, by churning the ocean of Upaniṣads brought out the nectar of Gītā and gave it to Lakṣmaṇa so that by drinking it one can attain immortality. (49) Paraśurāma, the son of Jamadagni with an intention to kill Kārtavīrya, practised archery while living with Lord Śiva, he heard Rāma Gītā with great attention while Pārvatī was studying it. He was transformed into an aspect of Nārāyaṇa (he became an Aṁśāvatāra). (50-51) If somebody wants riddance from heinous sins like Brahmahatyā, he should recite Rāma Gītā for a month and he will be free from such sins. (52) The sins accruing from accepting undeserving charity, eating forbidden food and making evil talks etc., are destroyed by chanting Rāma Gītā. (53) One who recites Rāma Gītā in front of Śālāgrāma, near Tulasī plant and Pīpala tree and before Yatis (ascetics) likewise, attains the result which is beyond the range of speech. (54-55) Who after reciting Rāma Gītā feeds the Brāhmaṇas in

One who observing fast on Ekādaśī day with his sense-organs restrained, recites Rāma Gītā on Dwādaśī at the foot of an Agastya tree, becomes identical with Rāma Himself and adored by all gods. (57) A person can achieve the inexhaustible merits by studying Rāma Gītā only even without giving charity, without meditation and without bathing in holy waters on the sacred places. (58) It is of no use to say more. Listen O Nārada, and realise the essence that hundreds of Vedas, Smṛtis, Purāṇas, Itihāsas and Āgamas cannot equal even a fraction of Adhyātmarāmāyaṇa. (59) The glory of the Adhyātmarāmāyaṇa has been narrated by Brahmā to Nārada. Whosoever reads or listens this, attains the abode of Viṣṇu and is adored by gods. (60)

Thus ends the glory of Adhyātmarāmāyaṇa in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa.

He, who even though only consciousness absolute and immutable yet implored by the gods to remove the overburden of earth, embodied himself on the earth in solar dynasty in the illusory form of human being; after exterminating ogre race and establishing His fame perennial, capable of removing all sins in the world, again resumed his original Brahmahood; Him the Lord of Jānakī, I adore. (1) I bow to the Lord of Sītā who is the only cause of the creation, sustenance and dissolution of the universe, even though soliciting the help of Māyā yet beyond the ken of Māyā, of the unthinkable form, Bliss solidified, taintless, with a self-illuminating form and who knows the truth perfectly. (2) Those who daily recite or listen single-mindedly the sacred Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa which is approved by all Purāṇas; get all their sins washed away, and reach the Lord Viṣṇu Himself. (3) A person desirous of freedom from the shackles of Samsāra should recite daily Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa only. Its daily listening earns such merits as are attained through the charity of cows in hundreds, thousands and crores in number. (4)

The Gaṅgā in the form of Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa springing from Himalaya in the form of Lord Śiva and merging in the ocean of Rāma, is sanctifying all the three spheres. (5) Once Goddess Pārvatī, the daughter of mountain Himalaya occupying her seat to the left of (Lord Śiva) with all humility spoke to him, the Lord of lords, remover of all sins, the bliss embodied, being adored by the batches of Siddhas, absorbed in meditation, the three eyed, always fearless, while he was seated on a throne giving the effulgence of gems in the apartment shining like one hundred suns, on the mount Kailasa. (6)

Pārvatī spoke—"O Lord, the abode of the universe, my salutations to You. You are the witness of the inner hearts of all beings and You are the Lord of lords." I ask you (since I am inquisitive to know) the real and eternal truth regarding the Supreme Person since You are also eternal. (7) The great persons unfold to their devotees even the Supreme secret which is not to be divulged to any and everyone. O Lord! I am your devotee the day in and the day out and You are dear to me. Be kind to tell me what I asked. (8) Kindly explain to me that effulgent knowledge capable of making human beings cross the ocean of Samsāra alongwith Vijñāna—replete with devotion and dispassion, in such a brief manner that though being a woman, I may follow it. O lotus-eyed ! I further ask you to tell me the supreme secret. Kindly tell it first of all. It is an established fact that the devotion to Śrī Rāmacandra, the only essence of the entire universe, is a strong boat to cross the mundane ocean. (10) To get liberation from the world, devotion is the only means so it is said. There is no better means for it, still I beseech to cut through your holy words, the bonds of doubt rooted in my heart. (11) The ever vigilant Siddhas call Śrī Rāma to be absolute, one without the second, the primal cause of the universe and beyond the (eternal) flow of Māyā as well as Guṇas and they adore him constantly day and night and thus reach the Supreme abode. (12) Some say that even though Rāma being Supreme absolute, due to being screened by his own Māyā for getting his self-awareness, did not know His own self. So after having been taught by the other (Vasiṣṭha) he could realize his own real form. (13) If he knew the self then how could he weep so bitterly for Sītā? If it is otherwise then he was just like anyother (ordinary) person and in such a case why should anybody adore him. (14) In this respect what answer do you have? Please tell me in words capable of removing my doubt. (15)

Śrī Mahādeva said—Blessed You are, you are a great devotee of Paramātmā and you have a keen desire to know the Rāmatattva. Prior to this, none else requested me to disclose this extremely guarded secret. (16) Today you have asked me lovingly and I after bowing before the best among Raghus, tell you. Rāma is undoubtedly the supreme absolute beyond the Prakṛti, the bliss incarnate, the beginningless, the only one and Puruṣottama (the best among the persons). (17) After creating the entire universe by wielding His Māyā, He himself permeated it from within as well as from without like the sky permeates every object. Even though seated in every heart yet He is still hidden and operating this universe by His Māyā. (18) With Whose gravitational force the entire universe is moving around as an iron piece activated by the magnetic force yet the ignorant people do not recognise Him as their mind is covered by Avidyā. (19) (The worldly people) superimpose their own ignorance on the Supreme which is pure and enlightened and beyond the reach of Māyā. (This way) attached with the sons etc., and engulfed in all sorts of mundane jobs they move around within the Samsāra (cycle of births and deaths). (20) The fools do not recognise Rāma even though seated in their own hearts just like the golden necklace in the neck (they do not cast an eye upon this and think that it is lost). Just as darkness has no room in the sun so there cannot remain Avidyā in Rāma the superior most Supreme Brahma which is self illumined and pure knowledge solidified. (21)

Just as while a person circumambulating speedily finds the houses moving due to his eyes reeling, similarly the man is deluded by superimposing the doings of body and senses on the Absolute. (22) Just as there is no night or day in the sun because of never being deserted by light similarly there cannot remain the (two opposites) knowledge and ignorance in Hari since He is pure consciousness solidified. (23) Therefore, there is no trace of darkness of ignorance in Rāma, the best among the Raghus, who is full of Supreme bliss and knowledge incarnate. He is the witness and seer of the ignorance and substratum for Māyā. So in such lotus-eyed Rāma, how can there be a room for ignorance ? (24) In this regard I am going to tell you a rare secret that is a dialogue between Sītā, Rāma and Hanumān quite capable of liberating (the Jīva). (25) In ancient times during the course of Rāmāvatāra Śrī Rāma, always eager to fight, killing Rāvaṇa alongwith his sons, army and vehicles—Rāvaṇa who was like a pinching thorn to the gods—came back to Ayodhya alongwith Sītā, accompanied by Sugrīva and Lakṣmaṇa and chieftains like Hanumān. (26-27)

There he was consecrated to the throne and he was surrounded by the great souls like Vasiṣṭha. His lustre was like crores of suns. (28) Seeing there Hanumān the wisest among the wise seated before him with his hands folded, who has finished all his jobs, quite desireless, expecting some discourse pregnant of knowledge (from the Lord). (29) Rāma spoke to Sītā—"Impart to Hanumān, the essence of knowledge. He is absolutely taintless, quite deserving to receive knowledge and ever intensely devoted to both of us. (30) Sītā who could enchant the three spheres, saying 'be it so' started teaching well-considered Rāmatattva to Hanumān who surrendered himself unreservedly. (31) Know thou Rāma to be the absolute Brahma, existence, consciousness and bliss personified, one without the second, free from all mutabilities, only the existence and beyond the reach of senses. (32) Unalloyed bliss, pure, calm, immutable, spotless, all pervading, Ātmā (cosmic), self-illuminating and sinless. (33) Know me to be the primordial nature (मूल प्रकृति) designer of creating, sustaining and dissolving. Quite alertly I procreate this (cosmos) only due to His presence. (34) I created all this only in his proximity but the foolish ones attribute it to Him. He took his birth in the spotless Raghu dynasty in the city of Ayodhya. (35)

(40) Extirpation of evil-minded Rāvaṇa alongwith his sons, leading Vibhīṣaṇa to throne and by Puṣpaka alongwith me arrived in Ayodhya and thereafter consecration of Rāma to the throne—all these deeds were done by me alone but people attribute these also to Rāma, immutable and the very soul of entire cosmos. (41-42) Due to his association with Māyā and the three Guṇas Rāma seems to be doing everything eventhough He neither walks nor stays nor worries nor desires nor renounces nor does anything and He is simply bliss embodied, immovable, immutable (43) After that Rāma Himself spoke to Hanumān present before him. Now listen: I am telling you the Truth of Ātmā, Anātmā and Paramātmā—the three. (44) Just as the three views of the sky we notice in a water pool such as Mahākāśa—the all permeating one, the sky which is limited within the pool and the sky which is reflected in the water, in other words Mahākāśa, Ghaṭākāśa and Pratibimbākāśa. (45) Similarly (the cosmic) consciousness is also of three kinds—(1) which is permeating the intellect (2) which is enveloping all and (3) Ābhāsa or reflection in the intellect. (46)

Out of these three the doership goes with only the intellect representing Ābhāsacetana. In other words the intellect accompanied by Cidābhāsa only does everything. But the ignorant, out of their ignorance, superimpose the doings and the Jīvahood on the untainted indifferent Witness. (47) The reflection is unreal and intellect is the product of Avidyā. The Brahma is indivisible. The so called division is assumed one. (48) By the great sentences 'तत्त्वमसि' etc., the limited Jīva is declared to be identical with unlimited, complete Brahma and so is the case of 'अहम्' with Ābhāsa.* (49) When through the practice of Mahāvākya 'तत्त्वमसि' etc., the oneness or non-difference between Jīvātmā and Paramātmā, is realised then Avidyā undoubtedly disappears alongwith its evolutes. (50) Knowing this my devotee becomes eligible to attain my form. Those, forsaking my devotion plunge into the pit of Śāstras, cannot attain either knowledge or salvation even after hundreds of lives. (51) O sinless Hanumān this secret (Rāmahr̥daya) is my own heart and is directly told by me to you. You should not convey it to a person who is a crooked one or does not have devotion to Me even if he is more affluent than Indra himself. (52)

Śrī Mahādeva spoke—O goddess, this Śrī Rāmahr̥daya the top most secret, appealing to the heart, sanctifying and remover of sins, has been told to you. (53) It has been taught by Śrī Rāma personally and is the essence of all Vedāntic knowledge. Whoever reads this constantly with devotion, is liberated; there is no doubt, (54) Through reciting this the sins like Brahmahatyā accumulated through life after life get vanquished, no doubt, as it has been said by Rāma Himself. (55) A person extremely fallen, a great sinner who always tries to get unlawful possession of others' wealth or enjoys others' wives, a thief, a killer of Brāhmaṇas and his own parents, destroying the interests of the Yogīs; if worshipping the charming Rāmahr̥daya of Rāma recites it devotedly, gets a position unattainable by the best among Yogīs and becomes adorable for all gods. (56)

Thus ends canto I captioned as Śrīrāmahr̥daya of Bālākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Pārvatī spoke—O Lord of the universe I am blessed, I am obliged and accomplished that on account of your kindness the knot in the form of doubt has been shattered. (1) While drinking the immortal Rasāyana of Rāmatattva dripping from your mouth which is a remover of the worldly bondage, my mind does not get satiated. (2) I have heard the story of Śrī Rāma from you in brief. Now I want to hear the same in detail and very clearly. (3) Śrī Mahādeva spoke—O goddess, listen please. I am going to narrate a great secret—greater than the greatest. It is Adhyātmārāmāyaṇa narrated to me by Rāma Himself in the time of yore. (4) That I am going to narrate. You please listen. It is capable of removing the three afflictions. After hearing it the person gets immunised from the great fear generated by ignorance and gets supreme prosperity, long life and male progeny. (5) Once the earth tormented by the burden of the Rākṣasas like Rāvaṇa, adopting the form of a cow, accompanied by gods and Munis, went to the abode of Brahmā and narrated the crisis faced by her with a tearful face. on his part had some introspection for a moment and being the omniscient and all-pervading knew everything. (6)

Thence Brahmā accompanied by gods and goddess Earth went to the shore of milky ocean. There he eulogised Lord Viṣṇu who has his seat in every heart, who is ever free from old age, omniscient and the Lord of all, with Vaidika hymns composed of pure words and phrases and at the same time beautiful Stotras from Purāṇas in a sweet and sanctified voice choked with devotion coupled with the joyful tears. (7) Then Lord Hari effulgent like one thousand suns together, removing the darkness (from all quarters) appeared in the east. (8) The Lord was not at all perceivable by persons devoid of virtues. Even Lord Brahmā could scarcely see him. He was blue like sapphire in his splendour, with a smiling face and lotus like eyes. (9) Adorned by ornaments like diadem, necklace, armlet, ear-rings and bracelets, splendrous, haloed by the shining of Śrīvatsa and Kaustubha. (10) Being eulogised by the sages like Sanaka and surrounded by the attendants, He was holding conch, discus, mace, lotus and wild garland. (11) Wearing sacred thread of gold (or sacred thread of gold colour) covering him with garments of golden colour, accompanied by Śrī and Bhūmi, seated on the back of Garuḍa. (12) After seeing the Lord this way Brahmā started offering prayer to him. (13) Brahmā spoke—O Lord,

I pay my obeisance to you whom the desirous of salvation always contemplate upon, with their vital air, intellect, senses and Ātmā. (14)

You with the help of your Māyā consisting of three modes, create, sustain and dissolve the world but you being the bliss personified, never get tainted. (15) The evil-minded persons cannot get their senses purified so much through giving charity, study of spiritual literature etc., as those who have always faithful devotion to your glory. (16) O Lord! I have seen your lotus-feet which will instantly remove the impurities from my heart, which the devotee saints always meditate upon in their hearts. (17) You have been adored also before to fulfil our selfish desire, by gods like Brahmā that is me. The wise men have always meditated upon you in their heart for the direct experience of yours. (18) The goddess Lakṣmī even though occupying her position on your chest, is always envious as a co-wife to the Tulasī garland offered at your feet in order to worship you, O all pervading Lord! (19) Therefore among the devotees of your feet, your devotion occupies superior position to goddess Lakṣmī. Therefore, your devotees, the knowers of the truth, desire your devotion only. (20) Let therefore, me be devoted to your lotus-feet always as your devotion is the only medicine to those suffering from the disease in the form of birth and death. (21) When Brahmā

O Lord, the great Rāvaṇa, grand son of Pulastya, the Lord of the Rākṣasas, has become arrogant on account of the boon given by me. (23) The torturer of the world, is now torturing the three spheres and their guardian deities. O auspicious one! I made provision of his death at the hands of a human being so you please incarnate yourself in human coil and kill this enemy of gods. (24) The Lord spoke—Propitiated by the penances of Kaśyapa I granted a boon to him. (25) He desired to have me as his son and I acceded to it. He (Kaśyapa) is now on the earth as Daśaratha. (26) On some auspicious day I will incarnate myself as his son from Kausalyā and other two mothers in four separate manifestations. (27) My Yogamāyā will take birth as Sītā in the home of Janaka and alongwith her I will do every needful. Saying so the Lord Viṣṇu disappeared and Brahmā said to the gods. Their weapons were trees and mountains. They were awaiting for the manifestation of Lord Supreme. (32)

(6) When oblations with full faith were poured into the sacrificial fire, the fire-god with the hue of heated gold having Pāyasa (a special preparation of milk) in a golden bowl, spoke—(7) O King, take this divine Pāyasa capable of bestowing sons, made by gods. There is no doubt that you will get the supreme Lord as your son. (8) Saying so and handing over the Pāyasa to the king the fire-god disappeared. consciousness embodied. (20-21) It is you alone, who with the support of Māyā create, protect and destroy the universe. Even though holding the three modes like Sattva etc., you always stand in the fourth stage of existence and ever untainted. (22)

Even though you appear to do everything yet you are not a doer, walking always yet never move, hearing everything do not hear and similarly perceiving everything perceive nothing. (23) The Śrutis say that you are devoid of Prāṇa or mind and pure. You equally permeate every being yet unable to be perceived. (24) (You are imperceivable to those) whose hearts are full of the darkness of ignorance. But you are very manifest to those whose inner senses are sanctified. In your belly are seen innumerable universes (moving) like small atoms. (25) You are born of my womb. It is just that you are following the worldly tradition. You are subordinate to your devotees—this I have witnessed today, O the best among Raghus! (26) Under the spell of your Māyā, I have been immersed in the ocean of the world and hankering after husband, son and wealth etc. It is today that I have taken shelter under your feet. (27) O God, let this form of yours be ingrained in my mind always. Let your Māyā capable of deluding the universe not overpower me. (28) O, the Ātmā of the universe, withdraw this unearthly form. Show me the most tender child form which may provide the supreme joy. I will transcend this terrible darkness of ignorance through the enchanting embrace of yours and talking to you. (29)

The Lord spoke—O mother! 'Be it so' whatever you desire and nothing otherwise. (30) Earlier I was requested by Brahmā to remove the excessive load from the earth. So to kill demons like Rāvaṇa, I have assumed this human form. (31) You and Daśaratha both practised severe penance to propitiate me in order to have me as your son, I have fulfilled it, O taintless lady. (32) It is the fruit of the penances of your previous lives that you have seen this form of mine. My vision is not possible for persons of questionable merits as it results into salvation. (33) Whosoever recites or hears this dialogue between us gets the salvation of Sārūpya type and at the time of death he will have my remembrance. (34) After saying so to the mother, Rāma assumed the form of a child and started crying. Even in his childhood he was shining like sapphire and exceptionally handsome with big eyes. (35) His appearance was just like morning sun in hue and splendour, and one who as if fondled all the Lokapālas. The king Daśaratha receiving the happy news of a son taking birth was so overjoyed as if merged in the ocean of bliss. He reached there accompanied by his preceptor Vasiṣṭha. (36) Seeing lotus-eyed Rāma, the eyes of Daśaratha were full of blissful tears and he got all sacraments of Jātakarma performed through the Guru. (37) The lotus-eyed Kaikeyī also gave birth to Bharata and Sumitrā to the twin brothers with faces like full moon. (38)

The happy king gave in charity one thousand villages to the Brāhmaṇas and also gold, garments and auspicious cows. (39) The Guru named (the eldest one) Rāma as the Munis after having their ignorance removed through knowledge, take delight in him and also because He permeates everywhere and plays with everyone. (40) (Their potential quality in view) the Guru named them as—Bharata on account of his feeding and sustaining quality, Lakṣmaṇa on account of all auspicious marks and Śatrughna, on account of his potential quality of killing enemies. (41) Lakṣmaṇa and Śatrughna due to effect of the Pāyasa (taken by Sumitrā from the share of Kausalyā and Kaikeyī) were closely attached with Rāma and Bharata respectively. They always followed (their favourites). (42) Rāma, moving along with Lakṣmaṇa with His infantile sports and gestures and sweet utterances pleased the parents. (43) On his forehead shone a golden ornament in the shape of Pīpala leaf studded with shining pearls and in the neck a necklace of gems interpolated with the tiger's nail. (44) In both the ears golden ornaments in the shape of raw fruits of Arjuna studded with precious gems, were hanging. The ankles were adorned by anklets made of ruby and the waist region with the golden girdle and arms with armlets, all tinkling. (45) With a few teeth in the smiling face, the sapphire coloured Rāma running after the calves here and there in the royal courtyard. (46)

Daśaratha and Kausalyā, seeing Rāma (in this condition) immensely pleased. During the course of taking meals Daśaratha called Rāma more than once—'come'. (47) Daśaratha calls affectionately and Rāma does not come in his childly pranks. Then the king used to ask Kausalyā to fetch him. On her part Kausalyā with a smiling face trying (to catch hold of him.) ran after Him but could not catch Him who is always the only prop of the minds of Yogīs. And then He Himself approaches the mother with his muddy hands, and taking a couple of morsels in the mouth again runs away. (48-49) His mother Kausalyā bedecking Rāma properly and (celebrating his birthdate) every month, made and distributed sweets of various kinds. (50) And on his annual birthday she made Apūpa, Modaka, Jalebī, Kacaurī etc., distributed it and celebrated the day (on a grand scale). (51) Kausalyā had abandoned her domestic chore on account of her son's mischievousness. One day Śrī Rāma ran to the mother. (52) "Give me food mother," She did not pay attention, busy as she was in her domestic chores. And Lo! The angry Rāma struck the utensils with the stick. (53) He felled down the pot of cow butter hanging on the rope and gave it to Lakṣmaṇa and Bharata turn by turn. (54) Then gave it to Śatrughna also and so was the case with curd and milk. When

(56) Eventually she caught hold of Rāma but did not say anything. Still as childish prank He started weeping gently. (57)

(Finding them frightened) She embraced them affectionately and fondled. In this manner the source of bliss, giving delight to the entire universe. (58) The lord assuming the illusory form of child provided bliss to his parental couple. After that in due course they reached the age of boyhood. (59) Vasiṣṭha did the sacred thread sacrament and they all became expert in all branches of learning and archery. They learnt the essence of all the scriptures (within no time). (60) The Lords of the universe as they were, held the human coil for their sportive purposes. Lakṣmaṇa always followed Rāma with great respect—(61) The relation between Lakṣmaṇa and Rāma was like servant and master. So was Śatrughna to Bharata. Rāma, the overlord, everyday holding bow, quiver and arrows mounting on the horse accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa went for hunting. There he hunted only dreadful animals and narrated everything to the father. (62-63) Getting up in morning then having bath, saluting His parents, looked after the administrative jobs with humility. (64)

After taking meals alongwith His brothers He heard the secrets of religious scriptures in the company of Munis and also explained it (to His brothers). It was his daily routine. (65) This way the supreme Lord unchangeable and immutable incarnating Himself as human being followed the norms of the mortal world and conducted just like any other human being but really speaking he did nothing at all (as he did not have any association with the world and what he did). (66)

Thus ends canto III of Bālakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva spoke—One day Viśwāmitra effulgent like fire, came to Ayodhya to have a vision of Rāma, the supreme Lord, knowing that he has taken birth through his own Māyā. (2) After paying obeisance to the Muni (Viśwāmitra) the king with folded hands and most humble with devotion spoke thus—"O, best among the sages, since you visited (my court) I am blessed. (3)

(4—13)

Whatever household the sages like you visit, all sorts of prosperity come there. Kindly do tell the purpose for which you came, I will certainly obey your commands truthfully. (4) The wise Viśwāmitra quite pleased, spoke to him—whenever on some auspicious time I start sacrificing for gods and manes. (5) (Every time and invariably) the demons Mārīca and Subāhu and their attendants interrupt it. (6) Therefore to kill them, kindly give me Rāma, the eldest of your sons alongwith his brother Lakṣmaṇa. It will be for your welfare also. (7) Consult the sage Vasiṣṭha also and then give them if you so please. The worried king took the Guru in a lonely corner and asked—(8) "What should I do, sir" I do not feel like sparing Rāma. After several thousand years and undergoing so much trouble I have got these sons. (9) All the four are similar to gods but Rāma is the dearest among them. If Rāma goes from here I will not live by any means. (10) If I refuse the Muni he will certainly hurl a curse (please tell me) how can I achieve my ultimate good and at the same time may be saved from not keeping my word. (11)

Vasiṣṭha spoke—Listen O king, it is a top secret and it should be guarded by all means. Rāma is not a human being. He is the Supreme God, the eternal one. (12) To remove the overburden of earth, implored by Brahmā, aeons ago, the same absolute Brahma O sinless king, has taken birth from Kausalyā in your palace. (13) Formerly you were Prajāpati Kaśyapa, the son of Brahmā. Kausalyā also was the famous Aditi, the mother of gods. Both of you practised severest possible penance for many years observing strict celibacy. You single-mindedly concentrated yourselves on the worship of Viṣṇu and then the god, bestower of boons and lover of his devotees, was pleased. (14-15)

The Lord said—"Ask for a boon." "Be my son, O taintless one" you begged of Him. So the Lord, the creator of all the beings said "Be it so." The same one in the form of Rāma became your son. The Śeṣa incarnated as Lakṣmaṇa as a follower of Rāma O king. (16-17) The conch and discus of the lord Gadādhara (holder of mace) appeared as Bharata and Śatrughna. Sītā, the daughter of Janaka is his Yogamāyā. (18) Viśwāmitra also has come to materialise the union of Rāma and Sītā. This is top most secret which you should never divulge. (19) Therefore, with a cheerful mind worship the Muni Viśwāmitra and send Rāma, spouse of Lakṣmī, alongwith Lakṣmaṇa. (20) Being so advised by Vasiṣṭha, the king Daśaratha thought himself to be blessed and felt happy in his heart. (21) Then he summoned Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa with due respect, embraced them and smelling them both at the head, handed them over to Viśwāmitra. (22) Then excessively happy, glorious Lord Viśwāmitra honoured the king with his blessings and taking Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa who arrived there fully equipped with bow, quiver, arrow and sword, departed (from Ayodhya). When they covered some distance, Viśwāmitra calling Rāma with devotion, gave him two Vidyās made by gods named Balā and Atibalā by having which hunger or weakness does not at all trouble. (23—25)

After that crossing over Gaṅgā they came to Tāṭakā Vana (forest named after Tāṭakā). Then Viśwāmitra told Rāma of truthful valour. (26) "O Rāma! Here lives the ogress Tāṭakā, capable of assuming any form at will. She is source of menace and torture to the entire world. You kill her without having a second thought. (27) Saying 'Be it so' Rāma took his bow, strung it and made a terrific sound out of that, echoing the entire forest. (28) Tāṭakā of dreadful form like a dark cloud heard and could not tolerate it. Maddened with anger she rushed towards Rāma. (29) Rāma swiftly struck her with a single arrow on her breast. The dreadful Tāṭakā vomiting blood profusely fell in the forest (30) Getting free from the curse due to which she was born in the species of goblins Tāṭakā became again the most beautiful Yakṣa woman fully bedecked, due to the grace of Rāma. (31) Saluting Śrī Rāma and circumambulating him, taking his permission went to heaven (32)

Then Viśwāmitra in an excessively cheerful mood embraced Rāma and smelled him at his head. He had some thinking and then joyfully handed over to Śrī Rāma the most handsome one, all the weapons with their respective secrets and Mantras. (33)

Thus ends canto IV of Bālakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva spoke—They (Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and Viśwāmitra) passed one night in the beautiful jungle named Kāmāśrama, inhabited by Munis and slowly started from there in the morning. (1) From there they came to Siddhāśrama where lived so many Siddhas and Cāraṇas. There the resident Munis instructed by the sage Viśwāmitra—(2) adored Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa instantly. Then Śrī Rāma requested Viśwāmitra to enter into initiation (and start the Yajña). (3) And O great One ! show me where those two wretched demons are. Saying 'very well' the sage alongwith the other sages started sacrifice. (4) In the midday those two demons who could assume any form as they wished, Mārīca and Subāhu, came within the sight raining blood and bones. (5)

The wise Rāma also held the bow and took two arrows on the string, pulled it to the ears and shot the two separately. (6) One of the two arrows took Mārīca revolving in the sky and threw him at a distance of one hundred Yojanas into the ocean which was something very strange. (7) The second arrow, a fiery one, instantaneously burnt Subāhu to ashes and the other ogres—followers of the two were swiftly killed by Lakṣmaṇa. (8) The gods in the sky showered flowers over Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. Divine drums sounded and Siddhas and Cāraṇas eulogised them. (9) Viśwāmitra adored Rāma, worthy of adoration, took him in his arms and embraced him with the eyes tearful of devotion. (10) He fed the two brothers with ripened fruits etc., and having the sweet discourses from the Purāṇa he passed there three days. (11) On the fourth day Viśwāmitra said to Rāma, "O Rāma, now let us go to see a great sacrifice." (12) In the city of Janaka, the king of Videhas, a great soul. There is a mighty bow of Lord Śiva as a trust from the great Lord Pinākī. (13) You will look at the mighty bow and will be cordially adored and welcomed by king Janaka. Saying this way the sage Viśwāmitra alongwith the two brothers arrived at the sacred Āśrama of Gautama situated near Gaṅgā, where Ahalyā was engrossed in penances and which was surrounded by the trees full of divine flowers and fruits. (14-15)

The lotus-eyed Rāma watching that Āśrama absolutely bereft of any animals or birds and without any living creature, said to the sage Viśwāmitra—(16) To whom does this Āśrama belong? It looks so lovely, shining and auspicious full of leaves, flowers and fruits but devoid of creatures. (17) O Lord! It makes my heart full of delight. Kindly tell me all the facts. (18)

Viśwāmitra spoke—Listen O Rāma, an ancient narration. Once there was a sage Gautama of world fame. The most righteous man and who practised penances in order to propitiate Śrī Hari. (19) Lord Brahmā, pleased with his Brahmacarya, gave him Ahalyā a matchless duty-bound beautiful girl as his wife. (20) Gautama, the best among the ascetics, lived there with her. But Indra was always on the watch to find an opportunity with an intention to rape her. (21) Once while Gautama was out of his hut, the Indra in the guise of the sage, had sexual intercourse and was just going out while the sage came back. (22) The sage got infuriated when he saw Indra leaving the hut in his own guise and asked "who are you, you wretched fellow, in my form and guise?" (23) "Speak truth or else I will burn you to ashes positively there is no doubt". He said—"I am Devarāja, a slave of sex. Please save me from your wrath. (24) "I have indulged

Seeing (there) Ahalyā trembling and her hands folded, Gautama said—"O lady of wicked conduct, stay in my Āśrama in the shape of a rock. (27) Without food, day and night, absorbed in severe penance, enduring scorching heat, (unfavourable) wind and (torrential) rains; meditating upon Rāma—the Supreme God in your heart. This Āśrama of mine would be deserted by all living creatures. (28-29) This way after you have passed several thousand years, Lord Rāma, the son of Daśaratha will come along with his younger brother. (30) When he (Rāma) will put his feet on the rock abided by you then only all your sins will be washed away and worshipping Rāma with devotion—making a circumambulation, prostrating at his feet, and praising him, you will be freed from the curse and will again serve me as usual. (31-32) Having so said Gautama went to the Himalayas—the best among the mountains. Since then Ahalyā invisible to the (earthly) creatures, in her auspicious hermitage—having only her breath as food, she is desirous of the dust of your feet to touch (her). She is engrossed in austere penance, O best among Raghus. (33-34) Redeem Ahalyā, the daughter of Brahmā and wife of Gautama. So saying, Viśwāmitra—the best among Munis, holding Rāma by his hand—(35) (He) showed to Rāma the fossilized Ahalyā engrossed in severe penance. Then (Rāma) touched the rock with his foot and looked at the ascetic lady. (36) Rāma bade his Pranāma to her saying—"I am Rāma." Thereafter, seeing Rāma in his yellow silken garments—(37) with four arms holding conch, discus, mace and lotus flower, equipped with bow and arrow and accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa. (38) With a smiling face, eyes like lotus, with Śrīvatsa on his chest, his hue like sapphire and lighting all the ten quarters. (39)

Seeing Rāma with the eyes expanded due to the excess of joy; remembering words of Gautama, knowing that he was Nārāyaṇa the Supreme. (40) The unblemished lady after having adored him in prescribed way with ablutions etc., her eyes full of tears of joy, prostrating (before him) (41) then getting up again she looked at the lotus-eyed Rāma; her body horripilated with joy. She praised him with a choked voice. (42) Spoke—O! I am blessed, O abode of the world, as I have got touch of the dust clinging with your lotus feet which the gods like Brahmā and Śaṅkara with the full concentration of mind, always seek for. (43) Strange are your pranks O Rāma. Your humanised form has deluded the whole world. Even though without feet, You are always on the move. You are the bliss incarnate yet holder of Māyā in its extreme. (44) The Gaṅgā with her body sanctified by the dust of whose lotus feet, purifies even the leading gods like Brahmā and Śiva, that very He is standing in person before me. How can my good fortune—the result of my past virtuous deeds—be described? (45) I have been adoring Rāma in his mortal coil, human form with a charmingly handsome body, holding a bow, with expanded eyes like lotus. And hereafter also I will adore no other God. (46) I meditate upon in my heart that Śrī Rāmacandra day and night, the dust of whose lotus feet Vedas always seek for, from whose navel lotus Brahmā sprang up, the nectar of whose name is very much relished by Lord Śiva. (47) I take refuge of that Rāma whose demeanours in incarnated life, are sung in the abode of Brahmā the leading sages like Nārada and gods like Brahmā and Śiva and (while singing whose pranks) Saraswatī gets her breasts drenched with her tears of joy. (48) It is that Rāma who is supreme soul, the Puruṣa primeval, the one (without second), Self-illuminated, endless, the first one, He has taken his illusory body capable of enchanting the whole world in order to show his compassion (on the world). (49) It is He alone who adopts three different forms and names of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva reflected in his Māyā in accordance with the three Guṇas—Sat, Raja and Tama—in order to create, sustain and dissolve the universe. Yet He is Swatantra, indivisible whole and Ātmā. (50)

I pay salutations to these lotus-feet of yours which Lakṣmī very fondlingly holds at her breasts, which covered all the three worlds in a single stride and which are the object of meditation by the sages devoid of ego. (51) You are the primeval cause of this world, you yourself are the world and its substratum too. Yet you are above and beyond and unattached with the world. You the, supreme one, stand self-illuminated. (52) O Rāma, you are represented by Oṅkāra and are beyond the ken of speech and Supreme Puruṣa. You yourself are communicable and communicating agency. So you are the world also. (53) Hey Rāma, with the help of your Māyā which is potent enough to assume many forms, O Rāma, you even though alone, appear in different forms of effect, cause, doership, result and means as well. (54) People having their intellect deluded by your Māyā do not know you in reality. They take you—the master of Māyā and Supreme Lord, to be human being. (55) You, the untainted, pervade everywhere within as well as without. You are unmoving, unattached, eternal, pure, enlightened, ever existent and immutable. (56) How can a stupid and foolish woman like me, know your real essence? O Rāma, so single-minded I pay my salutes hundreds of times. (57)

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे बालकाण्डे अहल्योद्धरणं नाम पञ्चमः सर्गः ॥ ५ ॥

O God, wherever (in whatever wombs) I may be, be I always devoted to your lotus-feet. (58) My obeisance to you O Puruṣottama, obeisance to you O Bhaktavatsala (having parental care to the devotees), my obeisance to you O Hṛṣīkeśa, my obeisance to you O Nārāyaṇa. (59) I pray to Rāma accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa, who is the only remover of the miseries caused by Saṁsāra, shining like crores of suns, holding bow and arrows in his hands, hue of his body like black clouds, wearing beautiful yellow garments, and ear-rings studded with precious gems. (60) Praising this way the primeval Puruṣa Śrī Rāma standing in person before her; circumambulating, saluting and having been permitted by Him, she went to her husband. (61) He who recites the prayer made by Ahalyā with devotion, gets freed from all sins and in the end attains the Supreme Brahma. (62) If one recites this for worldly gains like progeny etc., keeping Rāma in his heart, even barren woman may get a worthy son within a year and by the grace of Śrī Rāma gets all her desires fulfilled. (63-64) One who recites this prayer with devotion and keeping Rāma in the heart and meditating upon Him, gets salvation even if he might have killed a Brahmin, might have adulterated the wife of his Guru, a thief, a chronic drinker, might have killed his mother or brother, or a lascivious person what to talk of those who are devoted to ethical conduct. (65)

Thus ends canto V of Bālakāṇḍa titled as the liberation of Ahalyā in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva spoke—Viśwāmitra addressed Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa—"My children, we are going to Mithila ruled by Janaka. (1) After visiting the magnificent sacrifice, you may proceed for Ayodhya." Saying so he alongwith Rāghava went to Gaṅgā to cross it. At that time the sailor stopped Rāma. (2)

The Sailor said—Oh, Lord, I must wash your lotus-feet as there is no considerable difference between wood and stone. It is a widely known fact that there is some mystical power in your feet that humanises (the inanimate objects). (3) Only after washing your feet I will take you to the other shore. Otherwise if my boat, having a touch of the dust of your feet, transforms into a young lady, it might result in a great loss to my family O Lord. (4) So saying he washed the feet and then they crossed the river to the other shore. Then Kauśika alongwith Rāma proceeded for Mithila. (5)

They reached Mithila in the morning and camped at the place meant for Rṣis. Hearing Kauśika's arrival an overjoyed Janaka—(6) with the Pūjā materials, accompanied with his family priest, prostrating at the feet of Kauśika, adored him. (7) Seeing the two princes of Raghus having all auspicious characteristics, illumining all the quarters like another sun and moon, Janaka asked—(8) Whose sons are these two—the tigers among men and equal to Aśvinī Kumāras in beauty. (they look) like Nara and Nārāyaṇa who are generating a delightful love in my heart? (9) And the happy Kauśika made a reply while delighting Janaka—"These two brothers Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa are the sons of Daśaratha. (10) In order to protect the sacrifices (being performed by me) I brought them from the capital of their father. While on the way, on my behest He killed Tātakā, the menace to the world, with a single shot of arrow. Such is his valour. Then going to my hermitage—(12) He killed the (demons) led by Subāhu who were defiling my Yajña and threw Mārīca into the ocean. Thence He went to sacred Āśrama of Gautama on the banks of Gaṅgā. After having seen it Rāma desires to go and visit his father. (16) So addressed by the Muni, the virtuous king considering them to be worth adoring, adored them in prescribed manner. (17) Then he sent his wise minister. (17½)

Janaka said—"Hurry up. Get the bow of the Lord Śiva and show it to Rāma. (18) After the minister was gone the king whispered to Kauśika—"If Rāma could lift the bow and string its two ends. (24) Then with his right hand slightly pulled it and Lo! He, the only essence of all hearts, broke it filling the quarters with the tumultuous roar. (25)

All quarters, earth, heaven and nether world, all were filled with that sound. The gods in the heaven were watching (in suspense). To them also it was something surprising. (26) The gods covered him with showers of flowers and recited hymns in his praise. The divine trumpets and drums sounded and the nymphs danced. alongwith his sons. (33) Alongwith his ministers and queens for the wedding of the princes. "Be it so" said the Muni, the king sent messengers who were swift and valorous. (34)

The messengers went and submitted to the king all about the welfare of Rāma. He was overcharged with joy to hear the exploits of Rāma. (35) The king passed orders to his ministers to make haste for the departure for Mithila. He ordered—the elephants, horses, chariots and infantry—all start for Mithila. (36) Get my chariot at once. Do not delay. I shall start today itself. Vasiṣṭha, the royal preceptor, must be at the head of the procession alongwith the mothers of Rāma and his wife and all the fires. This way despatching all, the king got in a big chariot. (37-38) Followed by a big army the king hastily started, informed of his arrival, the king Janaka overjoyed as he was, he alongwith his royal priest Śatānanda, went to receive Daśaratha and adored his reverent guest in the prescribed way most cordially. (39-40) Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa offered Praṇāma at the feet of their father. A happy Daśaratha said to Rāma—luckily O Rāma I now see your face like a blooming lotus. By the grace of the Muni everything is alright with me. (42) So saying he smelt them at their head, embraced again and again. He was overjoyed as if plunged in Brahmānanda. (43)

Then Daśaratha alongwith his queens and princes was accommodated by Janaka in a palatial mansion well furnished with all paraphernalia and necessary comforts. (44) The knower of Dharma, king Janaka, on an auspicious day, in an auspicious Lagna and Muhūrta, got Rāma and his brothers escorted there, in the canopy quite sizable with large pillars studded with gems, decorated by Toraṇas, most beautiful filled with pearls, flowers and fruits. (45-46) It was fully packed with Brahmins expert in Vedic lore who were ornamented with golden ornaments and ladies (whose husbands were alive) with garland of Niṣka in their neck. (47) (The canopy reverberated) with the sounds of Bherī and Dundubhi and orchestra party accompanied with dance was (buzy). In such an atmosphere charged with joy Rāma was seated on a golden plank studded with gems. (48) Śātānanda, the priest of king Janaka, adoring the sages Vasiṣṭha and Viśwāmitra made them seated on either side of Rāma. (49) After ordaining the fire and in strictly prescribed manner getting it kindled, the king Janaka brought the beautiful Sītā bedecked with numerous gems. (50) Then he alongwith the queen went to Rāma with lotus like eyes, washed His two feet in accordance with the rules, sprinkled that water on his head which has always been borne on head by Śiva, Brahmā and Munis. (51-51½) Thereafter holding Sītā in his hand with rice grains and water, gave her to Rāma observing Pāṇigrahaṇa rules. (52-52½) (Said Janaka) Sītā my daughter, with eyes like lotus petal bedecked

Then he happily offered his real daughter Urmilā to Lakṣmaṇa. (55) And similarly he gave Māṇḍavī and Śrutakīrti the daughters of his brother—one to Bharata and the other to Śatrughna respectively. (56) The four brothers with all auspicious characteristics accompanied by their brides, looked extremely effulgent like other Lokapālas. (57) Then king Janaka narrated to Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra what Nārada had told him about Sītā. (58) (He said)—"Once when I was tilling land to prepare the sacrificial plot, a most auspicious and beautiful girl came up from the tip of the plough. (59) I saw her affectionately with a parental sentiment towards the daughter and handed over this girl with a face like moon to my wife. (60) One day while I was alone, Nārada came playing his great lute and chanting the name of Lord Viṣṇu. (61) Having been adored and seated comfortably the happy sage told me—"Listen. It is a secret that may be causative to your ultimate good. (62) The Paramātmā, Hṛṣīkeśa, with a desire to grace his devotees, to accomplish the purpose of gods and to kill Rāvaṇa (63)

has taken birth as Rāma in the guise of human being. Now the Lord in four forms is living as the sons of Daśaratha. The Yogamāyā in the form of Sītā is born in your palace. (64) Therefore you must give her to Rāma only by all means. (65) To nobody else (you should give her). She has been in her previous form, the spouse of Lord Rāma. So saying the divine sage went to Devaloka. (66)

From then I always considered Sītā to be Lakṣmī, the spouse of Viṣṇu. I always pondered over how to give Sītā to Rāma. During the course I thought of a plan. (67 ½) This bow was given by Lord Śiva after the Tripura was burnt, to my ancestors. Since then it is kept as a divine trust in the house of my grand father. (68 ½) I decided to make this bow as a primary condition for the marriage of Sītā—the bow which I considered to be a pride humbler to all. (69 ½) O best among the sages, by your grace the lotus-eyed Rāma came here to see the bow and my desires were fructified. (70 ½) O Rāma, by seeing you sit alongwith Sītā at a single seat like splendrous sun, n.y life is blessed. (71½) By holding water with which your feet were washed, Brahmā became able to set going this wheel of creation. Bali by holding the same water became the ruler of the paradise and Ahalyā got at once liberated from the curse of her husband when touched by the dust of your feet, who else can be a greater protector of us than you? (71½-74) Having supreme attachment to whose dust of the lotus feet, the Yogīs having subdued the time-circle, conquer the element of fear from the world (birth and death) and by chanting whose name the Devas have won over the misery and sorrow; I constantly take refuge in Him. (75) Praising in this way, Janaka gave one hundred crores of Dīnāras and ten thousand chariots to Mahātmā Rāma. (76) (He further gave) ten lac horses, six hundred elephants, one lac infantry and three hundred maid servants. (77) Janaka, a loving father, gave to Sītā beautiful garments necklaces of shining pearls and gems. (78) Then he offered due respect to Vasiṣṭha by adoring him and honoured Bharata and Lakṣmaṇa and paid due reverence to king Daśaratha. (79) He bade good bye to king Daśaratha, the best among the Raghus. The mothers with tearful eyes embraced the weeping Sītā and advised her—"Be always serviceable to your mothers-in-law. Follow always Rāma and live a happy life while strictly observing the rules of feminine chastity. (80-81) At the time of Śrī Rāma's departure from Mithila, the instruments like Bherī, Mṛdaṅga, Ānaka and Tūrya sounded and that sound when mingled with the sound of heavenly instruments like Bherī, Ghana and Tūrya, became a source of terror to all creatures. (82)

Thus ends canto VI of Bālakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—After departure from Mithila, Śrī Rāma must have hardly covered three Yojanas, king Daśaratha saw terrific omens. (1) He saluted Vasiṣṭha and asked—"O best among the sages, what for these horrifying omens are appearing everywhere? (2) Vasiṣṭha replied—"It is all indicating some crisis in the offing. But very soon there will remain no cause of fear. (3) Just see the deers are going on your right side. It is a good omen. The conversation was not yet over when a hurricane-like wind blew. (4) The dust in the wind blinded everybody's eyes and was painful. And then while going, he saw before him a heap of effulgence solidified. (5) Splendrous like crores of suns, effulgent like a heap of lightning, the glorious Paraśurāma. (6) His complexion like black cloud. The tall body, matted hair, bow and axe in the hands, as dreadful as Yama, the God of death. (7) That was Paraśurāma—the killer of Kārtavīrya, the vanquisher of proud Kṣatriyas, who appeared before Daśaratha like another death. (8)

Seeing him the king Daśaratha was so terrified that he forgot to offer adoration like ablution etc., and simply cried—"Protect, protect." (9) Prostrating before him the king said—"Spare my son's life". Paraśurāma ignored him while He was so saying. (10) Overpowered by maddening anger he spoke extremely harsh words. You, Rāma—the wretched among the Kṣatriyas—go by my name. (11) Give me duel at once, if you are really a Kṣatriya. Breaking that old and dilapidated bow, you unnecessarily boast. (12) If you could string this bow of Lord Viṣṇu, then I shall fight with you O scion of Raghu. (13) If not, I shall kill you all—as annihilator of the Kṣatriyas I am. While he was so saying, the earth quaked intensely. (14) All eyes blinded (a thick curtain of darkness fell before all eyes). Then the brave Rāma, the son of Daśaratha, looked at him angrily. (15) Rāma, snatching the bow from his hand, stringing it swiftly, taking an arrow from his own quiver, putting it on the string and pulling it, the valorous Rāma spoke to Paraśurāma—"O Brahman, listen to what I say—show me the target as my arrow is infallible. (16-17) By my order, speak. Be quick (what should I shoot) the regions (earned by you) or your two feet? Now you cannot go either to this world or the next. (18) Now (you yourself) tell quickly, what I should do to you". While Rāma was so saying, Bhārgava's face lost its lustre and remembering the previous episode he said—"O Rāma, the mighty armed, I now know you are the supreme Lord." (19-20)

(You are) the primal person Viṣṇu—the primal cause of the creation, sustenance and dissolution of the world. In my young age, in order to propitiate Viṣṇu as soon as possible, I went to Cakraīrtha—the sacred place—and there I, being single-minded, tried to propitiate Him by practising severe penance day after day. (21-22) Then pleased (with my penance) the Lord of the gods, holding conch, discus and mace addressed me—His lotus face delighted. (23) The Lord spoke—"O Brahman, now get up. Enough of your penance. Your great penance is fructified. You are now charged with an aspect of consciousness. Kill that bull among the Haihayas (Sahasrārjuna). (24) (Kill) Kārtavīrya—the killer of your father for which purpose you underwent the austerities. Thereafter killing all Kṣatriyas twenty one times; giving in charity the entire earth to Kaśyapa, get peace. In Tretā Yuga I, the immutable, Rāma will take birth as the son of Daśaratha. (25-26) I will be born alongwith my supreme power, then you will see me. And then I will withdraw my splendour bestowed upon you. (27) Since then you stay (on earth) for one day of Brahmā, practising penance." Having said so the Lord disappeared and I did what he said. (28)

You are the same Viṣṇu who have taken birth as requested by Brahmā. Now you have withdrawn your splendour which you placed in me. (29) Today my life became fruitful as you, unattainable by even Brahmā etc., and beyond the ken of Prakṛti, appeared in person before me. (30) There is none of the six states of change like birth etc., which are offshoots of ignorance, in you nor do you depart (like ordinary beings). You are perfect and immutable. (31) Just as foam and smoke appear on the stratum of water and fire respectively similarly by Māyā supported by and subjected to you, creates the whole universe and everything in it. (32) Till the people are enveloped in Māyā, they fail to know you. This Avidyā, stands opposed to Vidyā and it lasts only until a deep thinking has been made. (33) The supreme conscious power when reflected in the jumble called body made by Avidyā, is called Jīva in the world of mortals. (34) So long as one has got affinity with body, mind, vital winds, intellect etc., till then one will experience comfort and misery, doership and enjoyership. (35) The Ātmā is not a subject to transmigration and intellect cannot have knowledge within its embrace. Due to the indiscrimination the two become intertwined and the Jīva, becoming Samsārī indulges in different activities. (36) The insentient, in contact with the sentient, seems to be sentient. The same way the sentient in the company of insentient. It is just like the union of water and fire. One

So long as a person does not get company of the devotees of your feet, till then he cannot get freed from the miseries of the world. (38) With the devotion gained from the holy company, when one starts adoring you, then Māyā gets diminished and gradually goes away. (39) Thereafter he gets a Guru equipped with your knowledge who teaches him Mahāvākya and by your grace he is freed from the bondage. (40) So those who are deprived of your Bhakti, cannot get salvation or Brahmajñāna in hundreds of crores of Kalpas and consequently no solace. (41) Therefore, let me have devotion for your feet life after life and also the company of your devotees through which Avidyā perishes. (42) Those who are engrossed in your devotion and who shower the nectar of Bhāgavata Dharma in the world, sanctify the whole world and what to talk of their own kith and kins. (43) Salutations to you O Lord of the universe, salutations to you O Bhaktibhāwana, O compassionate, O Ananta, O Rāmacandra, my salutations to you again and again. (44) Be my virtuous deeds which I did to gain the higher Lokas—the target of your arrow O Rāma, salutations to you. (45) Then Lord Rāma, the compassionate one, was pleased. (He said) "I am pleased with you O Brahman, whatever you have in your mind, I will fulfil it all. Have no doubt." Then with a happy heart Bhārgava said to Śrī Rāma. (46-47)

If you are kind to me. O Rāma—the killer of Madhu, let there be a staunch devotion to your feet in my heart and I may always get the company of your devotees. (48) Even a person devoid of your devotion, if always recites this Stotra, may get your devotion, the knowledge of truth and he will have the remembrance of yours at the time of his final departure. (49) "Be it so" said Rāma. Then circumambulating and saluting Rāma and having been adored by Him, Paraśurāma with His permission set out for Mahendrācala. (50) Daśaratha was happy to see Rāma released from the jaws of death. Embracing again and again, shed joyful tears from his eyes. (51) With cheerful disposition, being his ownself again, Daśaratha arrived at his capital. Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Śatrughna and Bharata with their godly appearance, their consorts with them, rejoiced in their respective palaces. (52) Rāma, fully satisfied from his parental side (by getting all sorts of latitude and encouragement) rejoiced with Sītā as Viṣṇu alongwith Lakṣmī in His abode of Vaikunṭha. (53) (In the mean time) Yudhājī—Kaikeyī's brother and the maternal uncle of Bharata came (to Ayodhya) to take Bharata to his kingdom out of affection. (54) The king, the vanquisher of foes, dispatched lovingly Bharata and Śatrughna with Yudhājī offering proper adoration to him. (55) Kausalyā, the queen mother, when accompanied by Rāma and Sītā looked

Śrī Mahādeva spoke—Oneday while Rāma was comfortably sitting in the courtyard of his inner apartment; well bedecked with all ornaments and was seated on the throne built of gems. (1) His complexion was like that of blue lotus; Kaustubha was hanging from his neck; Sītā was serving him with Cāmara having the handle of gems. (2) He was merrymaking by chewing betel etc., offered respectfully. At that very time Nārada descended there from the sky to have the vision of Rāma.(3) His fair complexion was like pure crystal, he was resplendent like October moon (Śarat)—such a Nārada, divinely looking, unexpectedly came. (4) Seeing him hastily getting up, the happy Rāma with folded hands, full of reverence, saluted alongwith Sītā, head touching the ground. (5) Immensely delighted Rāma said to Nārada—O, best among sages, for the worldly people like me engrossed in sense-objects, it is very rare to have your vision.(6) O Muni, the vision that I have attained today, I suppose, is the result of some virtuous deeds done by me in previous lives because it is due to the virtues practised earlier that even the worldly people get holy company.(7)

Therefore O, Lord of sages, I am blessed by your Darśana. Kindly tell me, what desire of yours should I fulfil? I shall do it (positively). (8) Thereafter Nārada said to Rāma quite compassionate to his devotees—"Why are you deluding me O Rāma, with your words like those of worldly people"? (9) O omnipresent one, you have very rightly said—"I am Samsārī." (So you really are) as the Māyā which is the primal cause of the world, is your housewife. (10) Due to your association the progeny like Brahmā etc., take birth from her. That Māyā with her three modes stands only with your support. (11) She always procreates issues white, black and red (Sat, Tama, Raja). In this big house of the three worlds you are the only real householder (Gṛhastha)—a great householder in a great house of cosmology. (12) You are Viṣṇu and Jānakī is Lakṣmī; You are Śiva and Jānakī Śivā; You are Brahmā and Jānakī is Vāṇī; You are sun and Jānakī is solar effulgence. (13) You are Candramā and Jānakī is Rohiṇī with all auspicious characteristics; You are Indra and Sītā is Śacī; You are fire-god and Sītā is Swāhā. (14) You are Yama the incarnate death and Sītā is Saṁyaminī O Lord. You are Nirṛti O Lord of the world, and the auspicious Jānakī is Tāmasī. (15) Varuṇa are You, O Rāma and the auspicious Jānakī is Bhārgavī (Vāruṇī); You are wind-god and Sītā is said to be Your eternal pace. (16)

(17—25)

You are Kubera and Sītā is all prosperity (riches). You are Rudra the destroyer of the world and Sītā is Rudrāṇī. (17) Whatever object in the cosmos is known as feminine is Sītā and all objects known to be masculine are you O, Rāma! (18) Therefore in all the three worlds there is nothing that is other than you two. (19) It is from your reflexion that the ignorance comes which is known as Avyakta (unmanifest) from that Avyakta emanates Mahān (the cosmic intelligence). From Mahān comes Sūtra (Hiraṇyagarbha) and from that all-enveloping Liṅga comes out. (20) The multitude of Ahaṁkāra (ego), intellect, five vital airs, ten Indriyas is called by the wise ones as Liṅga which is subjected to birth and death; pain and pleasure etc. (21) That very multitude in the world is known as Jīva which is 'चेतनाभास' (the reflection of a primeval consciousness) and pervades the entire cosmos. The undescribable and beginningless Avidyā is known as 'करणोपाधि' (causative limitation). (22) The pure conscious being has got three Upādhis—gross, subtle and causal. Accompanied and modified by these is Jīva and devoid of these is Paramēśwara. (23) This Samsāra in the form of three states—wakeful, dreamful and deep sleep as it appears; you are its witness, the pure consciousness and quite above and beyond the three, O best among the Raghus. (24) This world has originated from you, it subsists in you and finally it all merges in you. Therefore you are the original cause of everything. (25)

When the Ātmā is considered as Jīva like snake in a rope, there is cause of fear. When it considers itself to be Paramātmā it gets freed from fear and miseries. (26) Since you yourself enlighten through your light of consciousness, all intellectual faculties in everybody, therefore you are the very Ātmā of all. (27) Due to the ignorance everything is superimposed on you as snake in a rope. When you are really comprehended everything disappears. Therefore a person always should be in practice of knowledge. (28) Those having devotion and reverence in your feet, get real knowledge gradually. Therefore only your devotees are really eligible for salvation. (29) I am a slave to your devotees, the devotees of your devotees and their devotees too. So be kind to me. O Lord do not delude me. (30) I am the son of Brahmā who was born of the lotus that sprang from your navel. So I am your grandson, your devotee, thus protect me. (31) So saying, saluting again and again with the eyes full of delightful tears, Nārada spoke to Rāma—(I have come here) deputed by Brahmā. (32) O, best among the Raghus, you have taken birth with the sole purpose of killing Rāvaṇa. Now your father will consecrate you on the throne to look after the state administration. (33) If indulging in state affairs you do not kill Rāvaṇa, what will happen to your promise that you have made to remove the burden of the earth? (34)

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे अयोध्याकाण्डे प्रथमः सर्गः ॥ १ ॥

Therefore O Rājendra, fulfil your promise as you are highly truthful. After hearing the argument, Rāma said smilingly to Nārada. (35) Now listen O Nārada. Is there anything anywhere that I do not know? What I have previously promised I will do that. There is no doubt about it. (36) As their Prārabdha comes to an end as per time schedule, I will kill them. This way I will remove the entire burden of the earth by killing the hosts of the Asuras one by one. (37) With the purpose of killing Rāvaṇa tomorrow I will go to Daṇḍaka forest. There I will stay for fourteen years in the garb of a Muni. (38) On the pretext of abduction of Sītā I will annihilate that wicked fellow alongwith his kith and kins. On having so promised by Rāma, Nārada was delighted. (39) Thrice circumambulating and prostrating before Him, permitted by Rāma, the Muni went to Devaloka. (40) One who reads, hears or remembers this dialogue between Nārada and Rāma daily with devotion, gets dispassion (as a first step) and then salvation named as Kaivalya which is rare even to gods. (41)

Thus ends canto I of Ayodhyākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—One day king Daśaratha while sitting in a secluded place called for Vasiṣṭha, his family preceptor and told. (1) Sir, all people of the state including the citizens the Paṇḍitas of the Vedic lore, elderly people and particularly ministers pay always encomiums to Rāma again and again. (2) Therefore I am thinking to consecrate my eldest son lotus eyed Rāma possessed of all good qualities, as I am already old, O best among the Munis. (3) Bharata accompanied with Śatrughna has been to his maternal uncle. I intend to perform the coronation tomorrow itself. Your approval is solicited. (4) Kindly get the necessary preparations made. You please go to Rāma and advise him accordingly. The city should be decorated with colourful banners and flags. (5) Let there be festoons embellished with gold and pearls. Then he called for Sumantra, the best among his ministers and said. (6) Whatever the Guru asks for, get it immediately supplied. The very tomorrow I will consecrate Rāma on the throne as Crown Prince. (7) "As Your Majesty pleases" saying so he asked Muni how he could be serviceable. Then the effulgent Vasiṣṭha, the best among the wise men, said to him. (8)

Tomorrow in the morning in the central hall there should be sixteen unmarried girls bedecked with golden ornaments and an elephant decorated with gold and gem must be ready. (9) (That elephant) from the Airāwata family with four tusks should be brought and thousands of golden vessels full of holy water. (10) must be placed on the proper places. Get three newly taken hides of lions. White umbrella with a handle bedecked by gems, pearls and ruby. (11) Beautiful garlands, clothes and beautiful ornaments (should be collected). The sages properly adored, should be there with Kuśa in their hands. (12) The dancing girls, harlots, musicians, those who play expertly on Venu, expert players of musical instruments—Let the orchestra start its performance in the royal courtyard. (13) Let the elephants, horses, chariots and the infantry stand well equipped outside (the conopy). All the temples in the capital..... (14) must start Pūjā followed by Bali (offering to the deity) of different kinds. The invited kings should come earliest possible with their different presentations. (15) Instructing Sumantra, the minister incharge this way, Vasiṣṭha went himself to the beautiful palace of Srī Rāma. (16) Riding in a chariot Guru Vasiṣṭha, the best among the sages, crossed three gates one after the other and then dismounted to the ground. (17) Being the preceptor he was

Seating him on a throne built of gems washed his feet with all veneration. That water he and Sītā had over their heads. (20) Rāma said—"I am blessed due to holding the water which washed your feet over my head. So addressed by Rāma the Muni spoke smilingly. (21) "By having the ambrosia of your feet Lord Śiva has been blessed. My father Brahmā also has had all the evils destroyed due to having the water of your feet." (22) Whatever you say now is just to teach the norm to the world otherwise I know you are the supreme lord incarnated with Lakṣmī. (23) For accomplishing the interests of gods, for making fruitful the devotion of the devotees and for the destruction of Rāvaṇa; I know you are born. (24) Yet for the sake of the divine interest I will not disclose the secrets. As you are doing everything with your Māyā, O delighter of Raghus exactly the way I follow your suit. I will act as your Guru and you as my disciple. Otherwise O Lord, you are the preceptor of preceptors and you are the grandfather of the manes. (25-26) You are the indweller in everybody. It is you due to whom all the world continues to be active. You are imperceptible. Your body is made of pure Satoguṇa and you have appeared guided by only your ownself. (27)

Through your Yogamāyā you only appear like a human being in this world. I take the office of a priest to be the dirtiest one. (28) In the olden days Brahmā, my father told me that the supreme God will take birth as Rāma in the Ikṣvāku family. (29) Since then under the hope O Rāma, that I will get a chance to have association with you I accepted this contemptible job. In order to get your teachership. (30) Today my desires have been fruitful, O Raghunandana! The Mahāmāyā capable of enchanting all the universe is under your control. (31) If you are intent to repay the debt (preceptorial), give me only this much that your Māyā may not delude me. (32) I will disclose this thing nowhere and no more what I have said inspired by the circumstances. I have been sent by the king Daśaratha, O Rāghava! to inform you that he would consecrate you on the throne the very next day. Today you alongwith Sītā should observe fast in the prescribed manner, maintaining all purificatory procedure, sleep on the ground and have your sense-organs completely subdued. Now I am going to the king and you come there next morning. (33—35) So saying and mounting on the chariot the royal preceptor hastily left. Rāma also having seen Lakṣmaṇa smiled and said. (36) Lakṣmaṇa, tomorrow I will be consecrated as Crown Prince but I will only be an instrument and you will be everything, the doer and the enjoyer. (37)

You are my outer life. You should not have any doubt. And then he did whatever he was instructed by Vasiṣṭha to do. (38) Vasiṣṭha on his part went to king Daśaratha and informed him of what he had done. While Rājā was talking about the coronation of Rāma before Vasiṣṭha, somebody over-heard it and he rushed to the city and announced this news. He even informed Kauśalyā, the mother queen and Sumitrā also. (39-40) The mothers horripilated with joy to hear this news, gave precious necklace as reward to the man. Then Kausalyā as an affectionate mother worshipped goddess Lakṣmī to have the coronation of Rāma materialised as truthful Daśaratha was known for his doings what he promised. (41-42) But the libidinous king henpecked by Kaikeyī as he is—'What he will do' (is not sure) so Kausalyā was perturbed. So she worshipped goddess Durgā. (43) In the meantime gods approached the goddess Vāṇī and importuned—"O Goddess, under the instruction of Lord Brahmā please go to Ayodhya in Martyaloka and try to put obstacles in the way of coronating Rāma. There you first enter the heart of Mantharā and then Kaikeyī. (44-45) After the obstruction has been caused, come back to heaven O auspicious one!" "Be it so"—saying so she did enter Mantharā. (46) The hump-backed Mantharā deformed at three places in her body mounted on the roof of the palace. She saw there that the city was well decorated all around. (47)

Everywhere, it was full of beautiful Toraṇas (arch shaped decorations), bedecked with flags and banners; atmosphere charged with ceremonial sentiments; she was amazed and came back. (48) She enquired of the Dhātrī (nurse)—"O mother, what for has the city been decorated?" Kausalyā too is overjoyed and doing different sorts of ceremonial deeds. (49) She is distributing garments to the best among the Brāhmaṇas. Then Dhātrī (nurse) informed her of Rāma's coronation. (50) It (coronation) will take place tomorrow. So the city is decorated from all sides today itself. Hearing this she hurried to Kaikeyī and spoke. (51) "(At that time) Kaikeyī with her big eyes was laying down on the couch. She was alone. Mantharā said—"You unlucky foolish woman, are you so sleeping? A great crisis has befallen you. (52) And you blinded by your charming beauty know nothing about it, O lady with the intoxicating gait. (53) By the grace of the king, Rāma will be consecrated on the throne tomorrow. Hearing the news immediately got up the sweet-tongued Kaikeyī and gave her the divinely built golden anklets studded with gems. (She asked) it is an occasion of joy then why do you say the crisis has come? (54-55) Rāma Bharata. He always treats Kausalyā and me at par and is always serviceable to me. has come to you?" Hearing so Mantharā, an enemy without cause looked as grief-stricken. (57) Listen to me my lady, the crisis is really knocking at your doors. The king tries to please you with coaxing words. (58) The king is libidinous and a liar. He only cajoles you with his words and bestows all favours to the mother of Rāma. (59) With this planning in mind he sent your son Bharata alongwith his younger brother to his maternal uncle's place. (60) This act will definitely be in the favour of Sumitrā as Lakṣmaṇa always follows Rāma so it is he who will enjoy the rulership of the country. (61) On the otherhand Bharata is destined to be a servant to Rāma or else he will be exiled or killed very soon. (62) And you will have to serve Kausalyā always like a maid. It is better to die than being humiliated by the co-wives. (63) Therefore promptly try for the consecration of Bharata and exilement of Rāma to the forest for fourteen years. (64) Then your son will be enthroned with no fear from any quarter. Now I am going to tell you a plan which I have already thought out. (65)

In the past while the fierce battle was going on between gods and demons the great charioteer and the wielder of the bow king Daśaratha was approached for help. (66) The king went there with the army and you accompanied him O beautiful-faced one! While he was engrossed in fighting with the demons, his pivotal pin from his chariot fell down without his notice. You inserted your hand in the pin hole and with great patience you kept it for quite a considerable time in order to protect the life of your husband O blackeyed one! Thereafter the subduer of the enemies saw you (in that condition) after he had killed all the demons. (67—69) He was quite amazed and delightfully embraced you and said—"Ask for any boons which might be in your mind, I will grant it," (70) The king personally requested you to ask for two boons. You said to the king—"If you intend to grant me two boons let it be so. Suppose the boons are granted." (71) Let them be with you as trust from me O, sinless one. Whenever occasion comes, give me these two boons. (72) Saying—"Be it so." Rājā suggested her to go to the palace. (Mantharā says)—I have heard it from you yourself sometime before. Now it has come to my memory. (73) Therefore get in the boudoir and behave angrily. Throw all your ornaments here and there. Lie down on the ground and keep mum O beautiful lady! (74) (Be in this position) until the king makes a vow to fulfil your desire. So hearing from Mantharā, Kaikeyī accepted it all to be the fact as her reasoning faculty had become misguided. Then Kaikeyī asked her—"O clever one, where did you get such talent from? I never knew you are so talented O deformed beauty. If my dear son Bharata becomes king I will give you one hundred villages and you will remain dear to me as my life." So saying she immediately went to boudoir in an angry mood. (75-78) Taking out all ornaments scattered everywhere, wearing soiled clothes, looking herself sad, she lay down on the ground. (79) She said—"O Kubjā, listen to me until and unless Rāma goes to the forest I will lie down like this or else I will give up my life. (80) The Kubjā said—"Certainly do it O Kalyāṇī! You will be benefited." So saying Kubjā went to her apartment. Kaikeyī also did (according to the plan). (81) A person may be very resolute, kind, virtuous, righteous, ethical, dutiful, a devotee to his preceptor, equipped with knowledge and discrimination yet if he is in the constant company of wicked and sinful persons he is sure to be influenced by them and will become like them. (82) Therefore the company of wicked persons must always be shunned. A person in an evil company is bound to fall from his aim as this princess (Kaikeyī). (83)

Śrī Mahādeva spoke—After that the king Daśaratha ordered his ministers and subjects to do everything auspicious for the good of Śrī Rāma and happily entered his palace. (1) There he found his beloved queen Kaikeyī absent and was extremely disturbed about what had happened. "She, who, when I entered her apartment, always came to receive me with a smiling face, is not visible today. Why so? This way mentally calculating with a heavy heart he enquired of the maid servants—Where is your beautiful mistress? That beautiful looking beloved of mine has not come to me as usual." (2-4) They said—"She entered the boudoir; we do not know why. Your Majesty may please go and make a personal enquiry." (5) Having been so said the horrified king went near her. Sitting there he touched her tenderly with his hands and said—(6) Why are you sleeping on the ground leaving a soft couch? You are causing pains to me since you are not speaking to me. (7) You have given up ornaments and lay on the ground with soiled garments. Tell me why it is so. I will do what you wish. (8) Who acted against your wishes? Whether it is a male or female, I will punish him or her. I will sentence him

(10) You know my heart and you know that you love me and I am always submissive to you yet you are causing pain to me and on the other hand you are taking unnecessary pains on your part. (11) Tell me which of your favourite pauper I should make rich and which of the richer ones having done wrong to you I should make pauper instantly. (12) Tell whom should I send to guillotine or pass a release order to one who is waiting for his beheading. It is of no use to talk too much; I can give my life for you O my sweetheart. (13) The lotus-eyed Rāma to me is dearer than my life. I swear by him I will do what you wish. Just tell me. (14)

While the king was saying so swearing by Rāma Kaikeyī wiped her eyes softly and made a reply to the king. (15) If you are truthful to your words and if you are swearing, you behove to fulfil my desire immediately. (16) In the past I protected your life during the war between gods and demons. Then pleased with my services you granted two boons to me. (17) These are still with you as a trust from me, O Suvrata, [one who keeps his vow]. As one of the two boons make my dear son Bharata the Crown-Prince with these very preparations. By the second boon send Rāma to Daṇḍaka forest. (18-19)

Śrī Rāma in the guise of Muni ornamented by matted locks and garments of barks, eating beet roots, should live there for fourteen years. (20) After the end of the exilement he may come back or live in the forest as he desires. The lotus-eyed Rāma must go to the forest by tomorrow morning. (21) If the execution of what I said is delayed in anyway I will commit suicide before you. Therefore be truthful to your words—this is what I desire. (22)

Hearing the dreadful and horripilating words of Kaikeyī the king fell down like a mountain stricken by thunderbolt. (23) Then he gently opened his eyes somehow wiped his eyes with great fear. (He thought) have I seen some evil dream or my mind is out of order? (24) He saw his wife sitting before him like a lioness and said " Why do you utter such fatal words, O good lady?" (25) What wrong did the lotus-eyed Rāma do to you? You always praised day and night the auspicious qualities of Rāma. (26) Formerly you said that Rāma is equally serviceable to Kausalyā and me as well. Now you say something quite different. (27) Have the kingdom for your son but let Rāma stay in the palace. Be graceful to me, O Vāmā! Rāma is no cause of fear to you. (28) So saying with eyes full of tears he fell down at her feet. Kaikeyī with eyes red, spoke in reply—(29) "Is there something wrong with your mental order, O Rājendra! You are speaking something other than what you promised. If you falsify what you have said you will go to hell. (30) If Rāmacandra does not go to the forest in the morning with deer skin and bark as his clothings I will certainly die before you either by hanging myself or taking poison. (31) In the gatherings you always boast of your truthfulness and deceive the world. Swearing even by Rāma if you are not true to your promises you will go to hell. (32) Having been so said by his beloved queen the dispirited king, as if drowned in the ocean of misery, fainted and losing consciousness fell down on the earth like dead. (33)

In this way he somehow passed the night which seemed like a year. At the time of dawn the musicians and bards started singing his praise. (34) Kaikeyī stopped them all and was furious in all her appearance. Then in the morning there was an assemblage in the central hall, of Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, Ṛṣis and unmarried girls. The royal umbrella, the Cānwara (both divine), elephants and horses, the other dancing girls and leading personalities of the city—all gathered there at the gate as instructed by Vasiṣṭha. (35—37) The women, the children and the elderly people—none of them could have a sleep during night. They were eager—"When shall we see Rāma in

(40) When shall we see Rāma or when will morning come—all the inhabitants of the city were so eagerly awaiting. (41)

They were quite anxious why the king did not get up so long. Sumantra stealthily went where the king was. (42) He praised the king with hailing expressions and bade salutations to him with bowing the head. To see the king very dejected he enquired of Kaikeyī—(43) O lady Kaikeyī, may you prosper. Why is the king not looking as usual? Kaikeyī informed him that the king did not get proper sleep during night. (44) The whole night Rājā thought of only Rāma and muttered Rāma, Rāma, Rāma. Due to sleeplessness, the king looks unwell. You please bring Rāma here immediately. The king wants to see him. (45) "How can I go without the orders of the king, O lady?" Hearing what the minister said, the king spoke to him. (46) O Sumantra, I would like to see Rāma. Get him, the handsome one, soon. Thus advised Sumantra quickly went to Rāma's palace. palace unchecked and immediately submitted to Rāma. May you be so well O lotus-eyed Rāma, come soon to your father's palace alongwith me. The king wants to see you. Being so said mounting on the chariot, a little startled he immediately went. (48-49) Rāma accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa went with the charioteer. He only had a fleeting glance towards Vasiṣṭha etc., in the central hall and hurried to where his father was. He bade his Praṇāma at the feet of his father. Then in order to embrace Rāma, Rājā hurriedly stood up. He could hardly extend his arms, uttering Hā Rāma, Hā Rāma, fell down in the middle of his efforts due to the excess of sorrow. Rāma swiftly held him in his arms and seated him in his lap. (50-52) The women started crying to see the king in a swoon. Vasiṣṭha also joined in order to know what caused the cry. (53)

Rāma asked—"What is the cause of king's sorrow?" When Rāma so asked, Kaikeyī spoke to him. (54) "You are the cause of his suffering. In order to remove his misery you should do something for his good. (55) You are truthful. Make the king also truthful. Once when he was pleased he granted two boons to me. (56) All that is within your power. The king feels shy to tell you that. Therefore you behave to release your father, tied with the noose of truth. (57) "Putra" literally means to be one who saves his father from going to the hell." When

Rāma heard Kaikeyī saying so (he was shocked) as if pierced by a lance. (58) Extremely pained he told Kaikeyī—"Why are you telling me like that?" I can give up my life for the sake of my father and can take deadliest poison. (59) Can abandon Sītā, the mother Kausalyā and even the kingdom. He is best among the sons who executes the wishes of his father without being formally ordered. (60) One who implements the orders of his father when asked to do so, is a son of second grade and he, who disobeys his father even though verbally asked, is a blot. (61) Therefore I will do all that my father has asked me to do. I tell you the truth and nothing but truth that I will do everything as Rāma does not speak twice. (62)

Hearing the Rāma's vow Kaikeyī started saying—"Bharata should be consecrated on the throne with the paraphernalia brought for your coronation. It must immediately be done. It is what I desire. With the second boon you should presently proceed to forest having the garment of barks and matted locks on your head, under the orders of your father. You should stay there for fourteen years taking food which is befitting only to the Munis." (63—65) This is your father's mission that you should get materialised. The king feels shy to tell you this all, O Raghunandana! (66) Rāma spoke—"Let Bharata be the king and go I to the forest. But I do not know why the

I am henpecked, my mind is reeling and I am following a wrong sinful track. Arrest me and capture the kingdom. So doing you will commit no sin. O delighter of Raghus, if you do this the untruth will not even touch me. Having so said extremely sorrowful, the king wept bitterly. (70) O, Rāma, O Lord of the universe, O the life of my life, leaving me behind how would you go to the dreadful forest. (71) Saying so he embraced Rāma and wept loudly. Then Rāma with water in his hand washed the eyes of his father. (72) Rāma, the expert in moral conduct, gently consoled the king—"What is the cause of sorrow if my younger brother rules over the kingdom? (73) I myself after having observed this vow shall come to your capital. O king, in the forest I will be comfortable crores of times more than in the kingdom. (74) This exilement has so many meritorious aspects of its own. Firstly your truthfulness will not be endangered. Secondly (gods will be benefitted) having their objects achieved and finally the desires of mother Kaikeyī will be fulfilled. (75) Now I wish to go. Let the worries be removed from the heart of the mother and the materials for the coronation be preserved. (76) After consoling the mother Kausalyā and convincing Jānakī I will come, adore your feet and then will happily go to the forest. (77) So saying and circumambulating the father he came to see the mother. There on the other side, Kausalyā was busy in adoring Lord Viṣṇu for the welfare of Rāma. (78) She got the oblation poured into the sacrificial fire through the Brāhmaṇas and gifted them ample money. At that time she quite silently was meditating upon Viṣṇu with full concentration of the mind. (79) In her heart as she was meditating upon Lord Viṣṇu, the indweller of all, consciousness solidified, effulgent, with his form superseding anything else, ever blissful, she could not see Rāma. Thus ends canto III of Ayodhyākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

So you need not worry. (6) Having heard so she became suddenly perturbed. She fainted and then again got up. The miserable mother plunged in the ocean of sorrow said to Rāma. (8) Just as a cow leaving her young calf cannot stay anywhere in the same way I cannot leave you, my son! you are dearer than my life. (9) If the Rājā is pleased with Bharata, let him give the kingdom to him but for what reason does he order you who are so dear, to go to the forest? (10) Or else the king as a boon may give everything to Kaikeyī but what harm have you done to Kaikeyī or him. (11) Your father is Guru to you no doubt, but I am still a greater Guru than he. Your father has ordered you to go to the forest but I forbid you to do so. (12) If superseding my orders you go under the instructions of the king I will give up my life and go to the abode of Yama. Lakṣmaṇa also in response to what Kausalyā said looked at Rāma and angrily spoke as if burning all the three worlds. (14) "I will handcuff the lunatic king with deluded mind and remaining always under the control of Kaikeyī. And then I will kill Bharata, his supporters and his maternal uncles. (15) Let them witness my valour while I will be burning all the worlds. And O Rāma, the subduer of foes, make efforts for your coronation. While Lakṣmaṇa was saying so Rāma embraced him (and said). (17) "You are brave O the lion among Raghus, and you are always trying to do good to me. I know what you said is all true but the time is not ripe for it. (18) This kingdom, the body etc., whatever appears before the eyes—if all these are real, your attempt may be regarded as fruitful. (19) But these worldly enjoyments are like a flash of lightning in the tent of clouds—they are so unstable, the lifespan also is as short-lived as a drop of water on the red hot iron. (20) Just as a frog even when in the mouth of a snake yet waits for insects (as its food) in the same way swallowed by the snake of death, people desire these temporary enjoyments. (21) The man does all sorts of things going through great pains day and night just for the bodily enjoyments but if he discriminates the body from the Puruṣa (Ātmā) then what enjoyments a man would like to enjoy? (22) The association with father, mother, son, brother, wife, cousins etc., is short-lived just like the gathering of beings at a water-place or the enjoining of wood pieces while floating on the currents of a river. (23) The Lakṣmī (riches) appears fickle like shadow; the young age is as unstable as the wavelets of water; the sexual pleasure is like a dream and life is so short yet the people are so infatuated. (24) This worldly existence is full of diseases etc. It is unreal like dream and the city of Gandharwas yet the foolish hanker after them. (25) Everyday by rising and setting of the sun the life span is shrinking. The man observes it and so does he observe the old age and death of others yet the man does not come to his senses. (26) The same day followed by the same night, recurs always but the foolish person fails to notice the velocity of Kāla (time) and runs for the worldly enjoyments. (27) The life diminishes every moment like water stored in an unbaked earthen jar and the diseases like enemies eat the body. (28) The old age like a lioness always frightens from the front side and the death also keeping pace with it simply waiting for the time. (29) Identifying the Self with the body which finally converts into germs, excreta and ashes the man thinks I am a world famous king. (30) Tell me how the body which is mutable and changeable, made of skin, bone, flesh, stool, urine, semen and blood etc., can be Ātmā. (31) Sitting in that very body you are intending to burn the world, O Lakṣmaṇa. All demerits appear in him who identifies the Self with the body. (32) "I am the body" this type of thinking is said to be Avidyā, and "I am not the body but Ātmā the consciousness" this type of thinking is called Vidyā. (33) Avidyā is the cause of birth and death and Vidyā provides release from them. Therefore those desirous of salvation must make sincere effort to practise Vidyā. Desire and anger etc., are the real enemies, O vanquisher of the enemies! (34) Among them anger itself is enough to cause obstacles in the path of salvation charged by which the person kills fathers, brothers and bosom friends. (35) The anger is the root cause of mental agony. The anger causes the bondage in the form of birth and death, it is the destroyer of Dharma. Therefore give up anger. (36) The anger is the greatest enemy and the covetousness is the river Vaitaraṇī, contentment is Nandanavana (the heavenly garden of Indra) and peace is the wish-yielding cow. (37) Therefore, have peace. In this way you will have no enemies (inner and outer). The Ātmā quite different from body, senses, mind, vital airs, intellect etc., is pure, selfluminous, immutable and formless. Until and unless men appreciate the difference of Ātmā from the body, the senses, the vital airs etc., they are bound to suffer from the miseries of the world and are subject to death. Therefore you must always feel in your heart that the Ātmā is different from the body etc. (38—40) (You yourself) being beyond the range of intellect etc., do everything. Don't feel sorry. Enjoying the destined, whether it is pleasure or pain and doing every job that comes in the natural course, you will not get tainted even though outwardly you hold the responsibility of doership O, Rāghava! (41-42) If you are pure by nature inwardly, you will not be tainted by your deeds. This saying of mine you must always ponder over in your heart. (43) This way all the miseries of the world can never bother and disturb you. And mother, you also always think over in your heart what I said. (44) Wait for my return. The sorrow will not trouble you for a long time. The followers of the path of Karma cannot always keep together just as rafts plying in the currents of water cannot move together. These fourteen years will pass like half of a moment. (45-46) Now permit me mother abandoning your sorrows in toto If you do so my stay in the forest will be a happy one. (47)

Having so said he prostrated himself at the feet of his mother for a long time. (Kausalyā on her part) raised him and had him seated on her lap and blessed him with praising words. (48) She said—"All gods like Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva alongwith the Gandharvas may always protect you while you

Thereafter Rāma, the Lord of Sītā, the omnipresent, went to see Sītā and convince her. souled father give you the kingdom of forest"? (59)

Rāma replied to her—"The king pleased with her, granted boon to Kaikeyī according to which he gave the kingdom to Bharata and exilement in the forest to me O, sinless one! (60) The mother Kaikeyī begged of 'King' fourteen years exilement for me and the truthful and kind King granted so. (61) O good lady, thus I will go soon. You should not put any obstacle." The loveful Jānakī, hearing those words of Rāma said—"I will go to the forest first and then you will follow me. It is not proper for you to go without me." (62-63) Pleased with what Sītā said Rāma spoke to his beloved spouse, sweet of tongue—"How could I take you to the forest which is full of wild animals like tigers. (64) There are terrific man-eating Rākṣasas. The animals like lion, tiger and boars moving here there, and everywhere. (65) The wild fruits and beet roots of stringent and sour taste are only food materials O, of beautiful waist. The delicious dishes like Apūpa are just out of question. (66) Even these fruits are available on certain places only and that too occasionally O good looking one. The path full of sand and thorns cannot be tracked anywhere and everywhere." (67) Dotted with caves and pitfalls, full of crickets and godflies. this way this Daṇḍaka forest is most troublesome. (68) We will have to walk on foot only in cold, wind storm and hot weather.

In the forest when you will see the Rākṣasas you will be shocked to death instantaneously. (69) Therefore O gentle one, stay at home. You will see me again very soon. Having heard the discourse of Rāma, Sītā was plunged in sorrow. (70) She felt a little surge of anger and with the fluttering lips she replied to Rāma—"Why do you wish to leave me, I, who am a chaste spouse of yours, who never thought of anyone else apart from you, the sinless one? You are righteous and kind hearted too. While I am with you who will dare to violate me in the forest. (71-72) Fruits and beet roots etc., that you eat and what remains from your eating, will be to me as delicious as nectar. I will be fully satisfied with that and pass my time happily. (73) While I will be walking along with you the thorny objects like Kuśa and Kāśa and the thorn itself will appear like a soft tender bed of flowers, there is no doubt. (74) I will not trouble you, on the contrary I will give you a helping hand in everything you do. In my childhood an expert astrologer, when saw me, foretold—(75) "You will live in jungles with your husband." Let the foretelling of the Brāhmaṇa come to be true. I will go with you. I will say something else. Listen to it and then take me to the forest. You have heard so many Rāmāyaṇas from so many Brāhmaṇas. (77) Just tell me if you ever heard that Rāma went to the forest without Sītā (in any of the Rāmāyaṇas You have heard). Therefore I will accompany you extending all possible help. (78) If you go leaving me (behind) I will die before you." Knowing this determination of Sītā, Rāma said—"Devī, come along with me to the forest soon. Give to Arundhatī all your ornaments and necklaces. (79-80) After gifting all of our properties to the Brāhmaṇas we will go to the forest" saying so inviting the Brāhmaṇas with all devotion through Lakṣmaṇa the chief of the Raghu dynasty, Śrī Rāma gifted hundreds of cowherds, wealth, beautiful garments and ornaments to the household Brāhmaṇas who were well versed in Vedic lores and men of character, with pleasure. (81-82) Sītā on her part gave all her precious ornaments to Arundhatī. Rāma gave many costly awards to the personal servants of his mother. (83) Similarly he awarded the servants of his own gynaeceum, and donated in thousands to the inhabitants of the city, the countrymen and the Brāhmaṇas. (84) Lakṣmaṇa also gave Sumitrā in the charge of Kausalyā and holding the bow in his hand came and stood before Rāma. (85) Thereafter Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa went to the Royal Palace. (86) Śrī Rāma of blue complexion, his body thousand times more beautiful than that of cupid, illuminating the quarters with his effulgence, accompanied by Sītā and the younger brother, slowly walking on the highway looking with pleasure towards the inhabitants of the city and the country who were curiously seeing them; sanctifying the entire world with his stepping feet reached the palace of his father. (87)

Thus ends canto IV of Ayodhyākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—All inhabitants of the capital saw Rāma alongwith Jānakī and Lakṣmaṇa coming on the path, looked at each other and talked among themselves. (1) Having heard (the news of) boons granted to Kaikeyī they all became very sad and said—"It is a pity that the henpecked king Daśaratha abandoned his beloved and truthful son Rāma on account of the wife. What type of truthfulness is his? Or for that how could that wicked, foolish and the one performing the horrible deeds, Kaikeyī exile Rāma who always has been truthful and did favourable things to her? Gentlemen, let us not stay here and go to the forest just today where Rāma accompanied by his wife and younger brother, is due to go. See, today Jānakī is walking on foot. (2—5) It is the same Sītā, a matchless beauty in the world, whom hardly anybody could have seen before, going on foot before the crowds without any purdah. (6) O! Look at Rāma who deserves all glory (Vibhu). He is going on his feet devoid of any conveyance like elephant or horse. Even though he is singularly beautiful and handsome in all the three worlds. (7) This Kaikeyī, the demoness has come to destroy everything and everybody. Rāma also must be feeling sad while looking at Sītā walking on foot. (8) ("It seems to be the conclusion) that destiny is the strongest factor. The human effort is quite weak and ineffective."

While afflicted people were just talking, the best among the sages, Vāmadeva surrounded by a retinue of sages spoke thus—"Never feel pity for Rāma or Sītā. I am telling you the truth. (9-10) This Rāma is supreme Viṣṇu and primeval Nārāyaṇa and Sītā is the Lakṣmī, his Yogamāyā. (11) This Śeṣa now known as Lakṣmaṇa is following him. This is all the Lord himself assuming different forms through the primordial qualities of Māyā. (12) It is He who became Brahmā the creator through his Rājasika aspect. It is He who sustains all the three worlds in the form of Viṣṇu through his Sāttvika aspect. (13) It is He who becomes Rudra assuming His Tāmasika form and causes annihilation of the world. In the ancient days this very Rāma incarnating as Fish accommodated the Vaivaswata Manu in the boat and protected him till the deluge continued. At the time of churning the ocean in the past while the Mandara mountain drowned and touched Sutala, it was He the best among the Raghus, who adopting the form of the Turtle held the mountain on his back and it is He who incarnated as a Boar when the earth reached Rasātala at the time of Pralaya. (14—16) This very Rāma, the delight of Raghus, lifted the earth on the tip of his tusk. After that he adopted man-lion form and granted boons to Prahāda. (17) And He tore down with His nails the demon Hiranyakaśipu who was a menace troubling all the three worlds. When in the olden days Aditi propitiated Him when her sons were dethroned, He adopted Vāmana form and through begging, He restored the divine kingdom to them. It is He who incarnated Himself as Paraśurāma in order to remove the burdensome load of the earth in the form of the wicked Kṣatriyas. (18-19) It is the same Lord of the universe who has now become Rāma and will kill the crores of demons like Rāvaṇa etc. (20) The wicked Rāvaṇa is destined to be killed by the hands of a man. Moreover Lord Hari was propitiated by king Daśaratha through austere penances with the desire of having Him as his son. Then the Lord became his son. It is the same Viṣṇu who in the form of Śrī Rāma followed by Lakṣmaṇa will go to the forest today itself in order to kill Rāvaṇa etc. This Sītā is the Māyā of Hari who is causative to creation, sustenance and destruction. (21—23) The King or Kaikeyī are not a causative factor even in the least for this situation. Just yesterday Nārada requested Rāma to provide relief to the overburdened earth. (24) Rāma himself promised him that he would go to the forest the very next day. Therefore simpletons, give up all the worries on account of Rāma. (25) Those who on this earth mutter Rāma Rāma everyday, get immunised from all fears and even death, forever. (26) What is then the worry for the inconveniences of that great-souled Rāma. In the Kaliyuga if there is any way for liberation it is Rāma-Nāma and nothing else. (27) He, the creator of the three worlds, in the disguised form of a human being, in order to provide opportunity to the devotees for his Bhajana and Kīrtana, and to kill Rāvaṇa is only playing a human role. (28) (Apart from this) he adopted a human form to fulfil the desire of king Daśaratha. After having so said the great sage Vāmadeva became silent. (29)

Those Brāhmaṇas also having all this heard, knowing that Rāma is the all pervading Lord, got their knots of doubt in their heart unravelled and remembered Rāma alone. (30) Whosoever contemplates everyday this secret of Rāma and Sītā, he gets the devotion of Rāma—accompanied with Vijñāna—strengthened. (31) You, who all love Rāma (or else loved by Rāma) must always keep it a secret. Having so said Vāmadeva went away. They also knew for certain that Rāma is supreme being. (32) Thereafter Rāma not intercepted (by anybody) entered his father's palace. Accompanied by the younger brother and Sītā went to Kaikeyī and said—(33) "We the three have come, mother, with the intention to go to the forest as desired by you. So we want permission from the father with no loss of time." (34) Having been so said Kaikeyī quickly got up and herself gave garments (befitting to the ascetics) to Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa separately. (35) Rāma undressed himself and put the wild garments. Lakṣmaṇa followed the suit but Sītā not knowing that (how to put on) taking the garments in her hand bashfully looked at the face of Rāma. Rāma (on his part) took it and girdled it around her on and over her usual dress. (36-37) Seeing this all of the royal ladies wept bitterly. Vasiṣṭha hearing the scream came and rebuked Kaikeyī with anger. (38) He said to Kaikeyī—"O, evil-natured! You were granted boon for Rāma only to go to the forests, why then O wretch, are you giving (these garments) to Sītā? (39) If this chaste Sītā, due to her conjugal devotion accompanies Rāma let her go in her usual beautiful garments and ornamented in every respect. (40) May she be with and please Rāma night and day allaying his hardships of forest life. "The king Daśaratha also asked Sumantra to bring chariot. He said—"Let these beloveds of forest tribes go mounting on the chariot." Having so said looking in full at Rāma. Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa fell on the ground with extreme grief and wept shedding tears profusely. Sītā, while Rāma was looking at her, mounted on chariot.(41—43)

Rāma after circumambulating his father mounted on the chariot and Lakṣmaṇa holding two swords, two bows and two quivers, mounted the chariot (in the last) asked the charioteer to proceed. The Rājā Daśaratha asked Sumantra to stop. (44-45) But when Rāma ordered him to go and not to delay, (the charioteer) drove the chariot. When Rāma covered some considerable distance, the Rājā swooned and fell on the ground. (46) The inhabitants of the city—children and old, the senior among the Brāhmaṇas, they all cried—"Stop, stop O, Rāma!" and ran after the chariot. (47) The king went on weeping for a pretty long time and then asked the attendants to take him to the palace of Kausalyā, the mother of Rāma. (48) I, who am afflicted with grief may live for sometime there itself (if at all I live). After this occurrence I will not live long without Rāma. (49) Thereafter entering the apartment of Kausalyā he again fell down and got into the swoon. He regained his senses after a long time but spoke nothing and kept silent. (50) (This side) Rāma reached the banks of the river Tamasā and made a night halt comfortably. Without taking any food he lived only on water and the all pervading Lord slept underneath a tree alongwith Sitā. Righteous Lakṣmaṇa the knower of Dharma on the other hand, bow in his hand, in the company of Sumantra, sat on guard. (51-52) All the inhabitants of Ayodhya came and stayed there not far from Him. They were determined to take Rāma back to the capital or else go to the forest. (53) Having come to know their decision Rāma was extremely amazed. (He thought) "If I do not go back and go I won't, they will be greatly pained." Having so decided he said to Sumantra—"Sumantra, get the chariot. We will at once go. (54-55) Having been so ordered Sumantra harnessed the horses to the chariot. Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa mounted the chariot and went speedily. (56) For some distance they proceeded towards Ayodhya and then they took a turn towards the forest. In the morning after getting up not seeing Rāma there, in a great sorrow they followed the marks of chariot-wheels and finally returned to the city. There they always and constantly meditated upon Rāma and Sītā. (57-58)

Sumantra also with due respect drove the chariot swiftly. Rāma, alongwith Sītā viewing and crossing expansive countries reached the bank of Gaṅgā near Śṛṅgavera. Having seen Gaṅgā and offering his obeisance with glee took bath in it. That best among the Raghus, sat underneath a Śinśapā tree. Then Guha hearing from his men about the arrival of Rāma—an occasion of great festivity, without any loss of time, delightfully quick, came to see Rāma, his friend and lord, with the offerings of fruits, honey and flowers etc., with great reverence. Placing his presents before Rāma he prostrated himself on the ground. Śrī Rāma raised Guha quickly and embraced him. (63) After Rāma had enquired about his well being, Guha submitted with folded hands—"Today I am blessed. My birth in Niṣāda dynasty is blessed O sanctifier of the universe. (64) O best among the Raghus, the touch of your body gave me beatific joy. This kingdom of Niṣādas is yours as it belongs to your servant that is me. (65) This state is under your control. Living here protect us. Come along please. We will go to the city. Sanctify my house. (66) Accept there fruits and roots collected by me for you O Lord, O best among the gods, oblige me, I am your servant. (67) Immensely pleased Rāma spoke to him—"Listen to me my friend. I will not enter any house or town for fourteen years. I will not take anything fruits or roots given by anybody else. This entire kingdom of yours is mine and you are my dearest friend. (68-69) Rāma having brought the milky substance of a banian tree arranged his matted locks in the form of a crown. Lakṣmaṇa also tied his own locks (in the same fashion). (70) The Lord took only water (for his food) and slept on the bed of Kuśa and leaves prepared by Lakṣmaṇa just as he used to sleep on the decorated luxurious couch alongwith Sītā in his palacial building in the city. (71-72)

While Lakṣmaṇa not very far, holding his bow, arrow and quiver, accompanied by Guha having his own bow, sat on guard with a vigilant eye watching every direction. (73)

Thus ends canto V of Ayodhyākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Canto VI

Crossing Gaṅgā— Meeting with Bharadwāja and Vālmīki

श्रीमहादेव उवाच

Śrī Mahādeva said—Having seen Rāma sleeping, Guha shedding tears humbly said to Lakṣmaṇa—"Brother, do you see Rāma sleeping with Sītā on a bed of Kuśa and leaves, the one who was habituated of well bedded golden couch in the grand palace. (1-2) Kaikeyī is made solely responsible by the providence for this misery of Rāma. Thus she committed a great sin by accepting the advice of Mantharā." (3) Having heard that Lakṣmaṇa said—"Listen to me my friend. Who becomes cause of whose misery (no body causes misery to anyone) and who is the cause of pleasure? (4) It is our past actions committed in past lives which cause pleasure and pain to us. (5)

There is none else who gives pain or pleasure. To presume that some body else is instrumental (for pain and pleasure) is the result of a perverted intellect. 'I do' this type of thinking is a perverted ego as the entire world is bound with the strings of its own actions: (6) The person doing actions on his own accord thinks that somebody is a well-wisher, friend, foe, indifferent, object of hatred, mediator or relative. (7) So the man directed by his own destiny must undergo with equanimity the pain or pleasure whatever and however it comes and be always cheerful. (8) I neither desire enjoyments to come to me nor do I want to shun them. If they come, they may come. If they do not come, they do not come. The man should never be swayed by the desire of enjoyment. (9) In whatever place, in whatever time for whatever reasons, whoever does any action virtuous or vicious, he is bound to experience the consequences thereof. Nothing else and in no other way. (10) So if any good or bad circumstances come we should not be happy or sorry. Whatever dispensation is made by providence it cannot be undone by even gods or demons. (11) A man is always visited by either pain or pleasure. This is because the body itself is the result of virtues and sins combined, meant for experiencing pain and pleasure. (12) Pain after pleasure and pleasure after pain (is a cyclic order) like day followed by night and vice versa. Those two can never be overruled by any creature. (13)

Pain is always mixed with pleasure and so is pleasure with pain. Both are said to be intermingled like water and mud. (14) Therefore the wise ones do not get hilarious in pleasure and do not feel sorry in pain. They experience them with patience thinking everything to be Māyā—non-existent. (15) Guha and Lakṣmaṇa were so conversing with each other when it dawned. Rāma sipping water performed his morning duties. (16) He said to Guha the king of the Niṣādas—"Friend get a strong boat very soon for me." Hearing the words of Rāma Guha himself brought an auspicious looking boat and said—"My Lord, get into the boat alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. I myself will row the boat attentively assisted by my own people." Be it so; saying so Rāma first got Sītā with the auspicious marks, boarded. Then holding the hands of Guha he the Acyuta (who never falters) himself boarded and in the last Lakṣmaṇa put the weaponary in the boat and then himself climbed. (17—20) Guha assisted by his family members started the boat. When they reached the middle point of Gaṅgā, the Jānakī prayed to Gaṅgā. (21) "O goddess Gaṅgā, my obeisance to you. When I come back alongwith Rāghava and Lakṣmaṇa after our forest dwelling I shall adore you. (22) So saying they slowly reached the other shore and proceeded further. (23) Guha requested Rāma—"I shall also accompany you. O the best among kings, permit me or else I will live no more. (24)

Hearing the request of the Niṣāda, Śrī Rāma said to him—"Residing in Daṇḍaka for fourteen years I shall again come back. What I say is true. Rāma never says otherwise. Saying so, embracing that devotee, consoling him again and again sent Guha back. Guha too quite reluctantly returned home. (25—27) Thereafter Rāma followed by Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa went to the hermitage of Bharadwāja. He waited out side the Āśrama. There he saw a student, called him and said—(28-29) "Please go to the Muni and inform him that Rāma, the son of Daśaratha, accompanied by Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa is awaiting out side the Āśrama garden. (30) Having heard this the disciple swiftly went to the Muni, fell down at his feet and said—"My master, Rāma has come alongwith his wife and younger brother and is waiting outside the Āśrama. (31) He, resplendent like a god, asked me to submit this to Muni Bharadwāja in a befitting way. (32) Having heard so the sage Bharadwāja instantly rose up and came to Rāma with water for oblation in his hand. (33) Seeing Rāma he adored him and Lakṣmaṇa in the proper way and said—"Hey Rāma, the lotus eyed one, come to my hutment and sanctify it with the dust of your feet O delighter of Raghus." Having said so taking the two with Sītā to his hut and after that worshipping him lovingly entertained well and said—"Today my penances are fruitful due to your accompaniment. (34—36) I know everything what happened to you in the past and I know what is yet to happen in the future. I know You are the supreme being and have adopted the illusive human form to accomplish your mission. (37) I know the reason for which you are incarnated as implored by Brahmā in the time of yore. I know for what purpose you have taken the venture of forest dwelling. I know what will you do hereafter. (38) Due to your worship I have gained a vision of knowledge through which I know everything. What else can I tell you? I am simply blessed O the best among Raghus. (39) It is a blessing that I am having your Darśana—you, descendant of Kakutstha, the supreme Puruṣa, beyond the range of Prakṛti. Then Rāma with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa bowed before him and said—(40) "Grand sire, belonging to the Kṣatriya family as we are, we deserve your grace." Thus after the exchange of salutations to each other they passed the night in the hutment of the Muni. (41)

When woke up in the morning they crossed Yamunā on a small boat made by the boys of the sages. They went ahead on the path to Chitrakuta mountain as guided by the Muni Bharadwāja. Rāma went to Chitrakuta where the Āśrama of Rṣi Vālmīki was situated. He saw the Āśrama crowded with the Rṣis, full of different varieties of animals and birds, the trees there, gave flowers and fruits always in all seasons. There he had a vision of Vālmīki, the best among the sages sitting on a mat. (42—44) Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa bade their Praṇāma by bowing heads. On the other hand Vālmīki having seen Rāma, Lord of Lakṣmī, unequalled in beauty, accompanied with Jānakī and Lakṣmaṇa, adorned with the charming crown of matted locks, his body like Kāmadeva, the lord of love, the beautiful eyes like lotus, suddenly got up gazing with unwinking eyes full of delight and surprise. He embraced Rāma the embodiment of beatific bliss, his eyes full of tears. (45—47) He adored Rāma, adorable for the whole world with devotion by entertaining him with oblations etc. He offered fruits and roots sweetest in the taste and fondled him. (48) Rāghava with his folded hands most humbly said to Vālmīki—"Obeying the orders of my father we have come to Daṇḍaka. (49) You know all that. What is the use of my narrating the cause. Kindly tell me some place where I may live comfortably. (50) I will pass sometime with Sītā there." Having been so said by Rāma the sage smiled and said— (51) "You alone are the best abode for all the worlds and all the creatures are abiding homes for you. (52) This way I have indicated the place in general for you O delighter of Raghus.

That place which you particularly asked for your abode with Sītā, now I tell you what is the suitable abode for your purpose, O best among the Raghus. Those who are calm, and equal-minded, those who do not entertain enmity with any creature, those who always do your Bhajana—their heart is a permanent abode for you. (53-54) Those who have given up right and wrong both and adore only you night and day—their hearts are the comfortable abodes for you and Sītā. (55) He who mutters always only your name and singlemindedly has taken refuge in you, he who is above the pair of opposites, without any desire—his heart is a beautiful abode for you. (56) Those, who are egoless, calm and without attachment and aversion, those who look with equanimity a clod of mud, a piece of stone and a piece of gold—their heart is your home. (57) He who has wholly absorbed his mind and intellect, who is ever contented, who has surrendered all his deeds in your hands—his heart is an auspicious home for you. (58) He who does not dislike when unfavourable happens and does not feel joy when favourable situation comes; who knows for certain that it is all Māyā and adores you only—his heart is your adode. (59) He who considers that the six types of mutations (existence, birth, growth, change, decay and finally destruction) take place only in the body and not in the Ātmā and he who takes the hunger, the thirst, the pleasure, the fear and the pain are the experiences of Prāṇa and intellect; those who are free from the worldly duties, their heart is your home. Those who see you, the consciousness solidified, the truth incarnate and the eternal one, the untainted, all pervading and supreme in every heart—in their hearts you alongwith Sītā may have your abode. (62) Those who have made their Ātmā (inner senses) steadfast with constant practise; those who are always scrupulously busy in the service of your feet; those who have washed away the dirt in the form of sins with the chanting of your Name, may you live in their lotus like heart accompanied with Sītā. (63)

Rāma who can and how can one describe the glory of your name which in effect made me a Brahmarṣi? (64) I in the olden days was reared among the Kirātas and lived with them. I was a Brāhmaṇa only by birth but always behaved like a Śūdra. (65) I, a slave of the senses, produced so many sons from a Śūdra woman. Thereafter I joined the company of the thieves and myself also became the confirmed thief. (66) I always used to roam holding bow and arrow; a killer of every creature whatsoever, like Yama the lord of death. One day I saw seven sages in a dense forest. (67) They were effulgent like fire god and sun God. I chased them with the intention to snatch whatever belongings they had on their person. I said to them "Stop, stop." Seeing me the sages asked "Why are you following us, O wretch among the Brāhmaṇas. (68-69)

I told them—"I am coming to get something, O best among the sages. I have got so many sons and wives. They are hungry. For their maintenance I roam about in the mountains and forests: "Then they quite indifferent, told me—"Go and ask your family members severally and jointly whether they will accept their share of sins you commit everyday or not. (70—72) We shall certainly stay here till you come back. "Be it so" I said and reaching home I asked the same question what the sages suggested. (73) (When I asked my sons and wife) they said O best among the Raghus—"Whatever sins you committed you are alone responsible for your sins. We simply enjoy their fruits." (74) Having heard their reply a sense of dispassion developed in me and after careful consideration I came back to where the compassionate-hearted sages were there. (75) With the mere vision of those sages my inner senses were purified. Throwing aside my bow etc., I prostrated before them. (76, "Save me O the best among sages, from going to the hell. "When they saw me prostrated before them the sages said to me—"Get up. Be it well to you. The company of saints is fructified. We will teach you something. It is with that that you will get liberation. Then they consulted with each other and came to the conclusion that even though I was wicked and wretch of a Brāhmaṇa and I deserved to be neglected by noble persons yet since I came to their refuge so I was to be protected by them with all efforts and by preaching the way for liberation. (77—79) Saying so they taught me your name O Rāma, in reverse order. They instructed me to mutter Marā with concentrated mind. (80) "Till we again come back, go on muttering as instructed." Saying so divine looking sages departed. (81) I on my part followed to the letter as they instructed. Muttering constantly with undivided mind I completely forgot the outer world. (82) This way a long time passed. Immobile as I was and completely unattached, an ant-hill developed on my body. (83) Thereafter at the end of one thousand Yugas the sages again came back and asked me—"Come out." Hearing that I swiftly got up. (84) Since I came out of the Valmīka as sun from behind the mist, so the sages told me—"Hence after you became Munīśwara Vālmīki, as you have been reborn from the ant-hill." Having so said they went to their divine abode, O best in the Raghu dynasty. (85-86) I on account of the grace of Rāma Nāma became what I am. And today I see you the lotus eyed Rāma in person alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. Today I am liberated no doubt. Come on Rāma. Be it well to you. I will show you the dwelling for you. (87-88)

Having so said the grand sage alongwith Lakṣmaṇa and surrounded by his disciples went (to a place situated) between Gaṅgā and the mountain. (89) There he got a spacious hut made—for his abode two beautiful hutments one from East to West and the other from South to North. (90) Rāma accompanied by Jānakī and Lakṣmaṇa, inhabited the two beautiful hutments as if they were some divine persons. (91) There Rāma alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa, well adored by Vālmīki lived happily surrounded by the gods and the Munis like Indra with Śacī in the heaven. (92)

Thus ends canto VI of Ayodhyākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Canto VII

Sumantra returns—Daśaratha expires—Bharata comes back and makes the obsequies as instructed by Vasiṣṭha—

Śrī Mahādeva said— Sumantra also (returned) and entered Ayodhya after sunset, his face covered with the scarf, the eyes full of tears. (1) Leaving the chariot outside he went to see the King, praised the King with hailing words, bade Praṇāma to him. (2) Then Rājā said in a pathetic tone to Sumantra when he was offering salutes—"Sumantra, where is Rāma with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa?" (3) Where did you leave Rāma? What did he speak for me the sinner as I am? Is there anything that Sītā or Lakṣmaṇa said to me the heartless one. (4) Hā Rāma, O the treasure of good qualities! O sweet tongued Sītā! You all do not cast an eye on me, who am close to death and drowning in the ocean of sorrow. (5) Weeping so for a long time Rājā got immersed in the ocean of sorrow. The minister with folded hands said to the king who was so crying. (6) Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa on chariot were taken by me near Shringyrapura on the bank of Gaṅgā where they halted. (7) Something like fruits and roots whatever was brought by Guha he accepted cheerfully only by touching with his hand but did not take it and left it as it was. (8) Śrī Rāma got the banian milk through Guha, arranged his matted locks in the form of a crown, himself spoke to me O king,—(9)

"Sumantra, tell the king not to feel sorry on my account. In the forest we will feel happier than what we were in Sāketa. (10) Tell my Praṇāma to the mother and tell her to give up all grief for me. She should console the aged king overpowered by grief (11) O best among the kings, Sītā also said to me with a voice choked with sorrow and eyes full of tears, slightly looking at Rāma. (12) Convey my prostrated Praṇāma in the lotus feet of my parents-in-law." Having said so Sītā while weeping with a downcast face went away. (13)

Then they shedding tears from their eyes boarded into the boat. I stayed there till they crossed Gaṅgā and went ahead. (14) Thereafter myself greatly pained, came here." Then the weeping Kausalyā told the King—(15) "You granted boons pleased as you were to your beloved queen Kaikeyī. You do give the kingdom to her son. Why have you exiled my son? (16) It is all your doing. Why do you weep now." Having heard what Kausalyā said the Rājā felt as if somebody has put a burning charcoal on his wound. (17) Then again, his eyes full of sorrowful tears he spoke to Kausalyā—"I am already dying. Why are you causing more pains to me? (18) Certainly I will die now itself as I was cursed by some Muni due to foolishness on my part". (19) In the past when I was young, quite arrogant holding bow and arrow, one night I went on a hunting errand in the big forest near the banks of the river. (20) There in the midnight some thirsty sage came to fetch water for his thirsty parents and when he filled his pitcher with the water it sounded loudly. (21) I thought that some elephant was drinking water. So, in that fateful night I put the arrow just to shoot the sounding object and shot it. (22) "Oh, I am killed", I heard this sound which indicated that I shot some human being. He further said—"O god, I had done harm to nobody. Who shot me? (23)

My mother and father must be waiting for me with the desire for water."Hearing those words from a man I was horrified. (24)

Slowly I approached him and said—"My lord, I am Daśaratha. You are unintentionally shot by me. You behave to save me O Muni. (25) So saying I fell down at his feet, my voice choked—Then the sage told me—"Don't get frightened O best among the kings. The sin of killing a Brāhmaṇa will not occur to you as I am a Vaiśya practising penance. My parents suffering from hunger and thirst must be waiting for me. (26-27) Serve the water immediately without having a second thought. Otherwise if my father gets angry he may burn you to ashes. (28) First serve them water, after paying them obeisance report everything to them. Take the arrow out from my body. I, suffering acutely will abandon my life. (29) Having been so instructed by the Muni I hurriedly took out the arrow from his body, carrying the pitcher of water went there, where the couple was extremely old, blind, afflicted with hunger and thirst surmising why their son did not come with water. (30-31) We are helpless, in a deplorable condition suffering from thirst. Why our son even though quite devoted, is neglecting us. (32) While they were so worried, they heard my approaching sound. The father said—"Son, why did you delay so much? (33) Serve us the sweet water and you also take it." While they were speaking like that, I, struck with fear, gently went near them. (34)

Fell down at their feet and said to them most humbly—"I am not your son. I am Daśaratha, the king of Ayodhya. (35) I am a sinner. On my hunting errand in the night killing the animals I heard from a distance the sound of some body's entering the water. (36) Hearing that sound I shot a Śabdabedhī arrow. Then I heard the sound 'Oh, I am killed.' I went there horrified. (37) There I saw a young ascetic with disturbed matted locks lying on the ground. Horrified as I was, I took his feet in my hands and requested him to protect me. (38) He assured me—"Don't fear. There is no fear of Brahmahatyā to you. Go and give water to my parents. Bid your Praṇāma to them and beg for your life." (39) So instructed by the Muni, I, his murderer, have come to you. Kindly save me. You both are compassionate and I take refuge in you. (40) Hearing so the two extremely pained wept bitterly and felt a poignant grief. They fell down and said—"Take us without delay to where our son is." (41) Then I conducted the old couple where their son was lying. They touched and felt their son with their hands and cried bitterly. (42) Making the sound Hā, Hā and crying, they addressed their son many times as, 'give us water son.' For what reason are you not giving water. (43) Then they instructed me to erect funeral pyre soon. I made the pyre and then all three of them mounted on the pyre and with fire inflamed their bodies got burnt and they went to the heaven. (44) The father cursed me—"You will meet the same fate. You will also die on account of grief for your son as I so curse. (45) That time of curse has inevitably come to me now. The king saying so and overwhelmed by grief wailed bitterly. (46) "O Rāma, my son, O Sītā, O Lakṣmaṇa, the treasure of noble qualities due to your separation I am meeting my death caused by Kaikeyī. (47)

Speaking so Daśaratha expired and went to heaven. Kausalyā, Sumitrā and the other ladies of royal circle screamed and beating their chest wept loudly. In the morning Vasiṣṭha arrived there surrounded by the ministers. (48-49) He arranged for the dead body of the king to be kept in a wooden vessel full of oil and then ordered the messengers go quickly on the horses to the capital of Yudhājīt. (50) There is the venerable king Bharata alongwith Śatrughna. Ask the king Bharata to come back soon. (Tell him that) these are my orders. (51) He should come and see the king and Kaikeyī". Having been so said the messengers went at once to the maternal uncle of Bharata—Yudhājīt. (52) Reaching there they saluted Yudhājīt, Bharata and Śatrughna and said—"The Guru Vasiṣṭha instructed you that Bharata and Śatrughna must immediately come back to Ayodhya without having a second thought." Having been so ordered the terrified Bharata as instructed by the Guru came followed by Śatrughna alongwith the messengers. He was worried apprehending some calamity has visited to either the king or Rāma. (53—55)

Thus the worried Bharata while on the way was engrossed in thinking (all possible reasons why he was so summoned) and he reached the city. There he saw (against his expectations) the city appearing gloomy without any charm and desolate. (56) Observing the city denuded of ceremonial functions he became extremely worried. Entering the royal palace he found it also devoid of royal splendour. (57) He saw there Kaikeyī sitting alone on a seat. He saluted her with his head at her feet full of filial devotion. (58) Seeing Bharata arrived Kaikeyī sprang up to her feet due to the motherly affection, embraced him and got him seated in her lap. (59) She smelled him on his head and enquired of well being there in her maternal home. Is my father, my brother and my glorious mother well? (60) I am lucky enough to see you quite well, my son. Having been so enquired by the mother Bharata, all his senses perturbed, with an afflicted mind, asked his mother—"Mother, where is my father that you are sitting here all alone? (61-62) My father never remained in seclusion without you. Now I do not see him. Tell me where he is. (63) Not seeing the father my heart is anguished and pained. "Then Kaikeyī said to her son—"There is nothing for you to be grieved

(65) Having heard so Bharata overwhelmed by sorrow fell on the ground. "O father where have you gone leaving me in the ocean of misery? (66) Where have you gone without handing me over in the charge of the king Rāma? Seeing the son weeping and fallen, the curly locks unarranged, she raised him, wiped his eyes and said—"Be consoled my son. Be it well to you. I have done everything worth to be done. (67-68) Bharata asked her—"While breathing his last what did father say ?" Kaikeyī told Bharata in a fearless spirit. (69) He cried "Hā Rāma, Rāma, Sītā, Lakṣmaṇa, again and again. Crying this way for a long time he abandoned his body and departed for heaven" (70) Then Bharata asked her—"Mother, was Rāma not by his side? At that time Lakṣmaṇa or Sītā also were not there, were they? Where had all of them gone? (71)

Kaikeyī Said—For making Rāma Crown Prince our father made every arrangement. Then I put an obstacle in order to get the kingdom for you. the other I required Rāma to go to the forest as an ascetic. Thereafter your father the truthful king giving the kingdom to you sent Rāma to the forest. Sītā also observing the norms of chastity, followed Rāma. (73—75) Showing his brotherly affection, Lakṣmaṇa also followed Rāma. After they all went to the forest the Rājā brooding over and over about them weeping bitterly, calling Rāma and Rāma thus the best among the kings, died. "Having heard these words of his mother, Bharata becoming unconscious fell on the ground like a tree stricken by the thunderbolt. Seeing him in such a condition the pained Kaikeyī again said—"My child there is nothing for you to lament. (76—78) When you have got such a big kingdom where is the occasion for wailing?" While she was so saying Bharata as if scorching his mother (with angry look retorted). (79) O sinful and husband killing woman, the most wicked, you do not deserve to be spoken to by me. O sinful one since I have taken birth from your womb, now I myself have also become a sinner. So (as an expiatory step) either I will enter into the fire or will take poison or I will kill myself with a sword and will go to the abode of Yama. O, the murderess of your own husband, wretch you will be damned to the Kumbhīpāka hell. (80-81) So scolding Kaikeyī, he went to the apartment of Kausalyā. Seeing Bharata she also wept bitterly. (82) Bharata also fell down at her feet and wept.

Embracing Bharata the gentle and glorious mother of Rāma, lean and thin, with a gloomy face, eyes with tears, spoke so. (83)

"My child, while you were away, it all happened. Your mother must have told you and you must have heard what she did. (84) My son Rāmacandra of the Raghu dynasty alongwith his wife and Lakṣmaṇa wearing the garment of an ascetic with matted locks on his head, went to the forest leaving me plunged in the ocean of miseries. (85) O Rāma, O my lord of the Raghu dynasty, you even though supreme being, took birth as my son yet I had to face the misery. Hence I come to the conclusion that providence is more powerful. (86) Bharata oppressed as he was, when saw Kausalyā weeping bitterly with extreme sorrow held her feet and said—"Mother listen to me. (87) Whatever mischief Kaikeyī did on the occasion of Rāma's coronation or even at any other time, if it had been motivated by me, then mother I must get the sin resulting from one hundred Brahmahatyās. What sin I may commit by killing Guru Vasiṣṭha alongwith Arundhatī, the same may occur to me if I had even an inkling whatsoever. Swearing this way Bharata also wept thereafter. (88—90) Kausalyā embraced him and said—"I know my son, grieve not." In the meantime coming to know about the arrival of Bharata, Vasiṣṭha accompanied by ministers went to the royal palace and there having seen Bharata so weeping, respectfully addressed him thus. (91-92) "Rājā Daśaratha quite aged, wise, with truthful valour, enjoying all mortal comforts, performing a number of sacrificial rituals like horse sacrifice, paying big sacrificial fees (Dakṣiṇā to the Brāhmaṇas) obtaining Rāma, the supreme being as his son, in the end went to heaven to share alongwith Indra, half of his throne. (93-94) You unnecessarily lament on his account. He does not deserve to be grieved for. He is entitled for liberation. The Ātmā is eternal, immutable, pure and free of birth and death. (95) The body is inert, extremely defiled and perishable. If we seriously consider, there is no occasion for any grief. (96) If a father or a son dies, it is only the fools who beating their chest, lament. (97) In this unreal world if the wise are faced with separation (of any object or person) it leads to dispassion (in them) and it brings them more peace and pleasure. (98) When somebody takes birth in this world the death always follows him. Therefore the death is inevitable always for those who are born in this world. (99) All creatures are subjected to birth and death according to their own deeds. In spite of being aware of this fact, how an unwise grieves for his relatives? (100) Crores of cosmic eggs have perished. Many many creations have gone. Someday all these oceans will dry out. (under such circumstances) what faith can be had in the momentary human life? (101) The life span is as ephemeral as a drop of water hanging from a trembling leaf and which deserts the person quite untimely. What faith do you have in it? (102)

The deeds done through the previous body have led the Ātmā to assume this body. Deeds done through this body will cause it to assume another body. (103) Just as a person takes off old clothes and puts on new ones similarly the Ātmā discarding the old body gets a new one. (104) What occasion is there for grief? Ātmā as such, neither dies nor takes birth nor does it grow. (105) It is devoid of the six mutations, endless, embodiment of truth and consciousness and bliss, a witness to (the functions of) the intellect etc., and imperishable. (106) Ātmā is one without second, supreme and equally pervasive. Know and hold it firmly; give up all lamentations and do the obsequies. (107) Take out the body of your father from the oil vessel and alongwith the ministers and us, the Rṣis, perform the funeral rites in the prescribed manner O delighter of the clan. (108) So instructed by the Guru in person, Bharata gave up all his grief resulted from ignorance and performed the funeral ceremony in a befitting manner. (109) Following the instructions of the Guru he did the obsequies in a manner befitting to an Agnihotrī. He did the funeral of his father's body according to the scriptural instructions. (110) Thereafter on the eleventh day

(112) He in the company of Vasiṣṭha and the brother, and the ministers lived in his apartment while dwelling upon Rāma (113) He felt that after the exilement of Rāma alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa to the frightful forest, the very sight of my mother like a demoness scorches my heart. So I will decidedly go to the forest today itself kicking off the Kingdom and will render always my services to Rāma and Sītā having a smiling and beautiful face. (114)

Śatrughna brought. When they were seated, he spoke to Bharata the suppressor of foes, in a manner befitting to the occasion—'My child, we will consecrate you today as per orders of your father. (2-3) Kaikeyī asked the kingdom for you, O the best among men, the king, truthful as he was, gave it as per his promise. (4) So let your coronation be made by the Munis to-day with the recitation of Mantras. Having so heard, Bharata said—"What have I to do with the Kingdom?" (5) The king of kings is Rāma. I am his slave. I will go tomorrow morning to bring him back earliest possible. (6) I, you, the mothers except the demoness Kaikeyī (will be going). As a matter of fact I would have killed Kaikeyī, the wretch of a mother, but alas! Rāma, the best among the Raghus, will not excuse me, the killer of a woman. Thus I shall go alongwith Śatrughna to the Daṇḍaka by foot tomorrow morning irrespective of the fact, whether you follow or not. I shall go to the forest with Śatrughna clad with bark—in the manner Rāma went, will take food of fruits and roots, will sleep on the ground, will have my locks of hair matted till Rāma comes back. (7-10) Having so determined Bharata kept silent. The audience got pleased and praised him as "well said, well said". (11)

(13) Reaching Shringverapura, the huge army under the orders of Śatrughna took halt here and there on the bank of Gaṅgā. (14) Having heard the arrival of Bharata, with a huge army Guha became suspicious (his suspicion was) about the intention of Bharata whether he was going to cause harm to Rāma unaware of the situation. I must be assured of his intention. If it is pure he may cross the river. (15-16) Otherwise the members of my clan fully armed should get posted (at the strategic position) and have a vigilant eye on all directions and remove the boats from the ghat. (17) Passing such orders Guha came to Bharata with presents of various kinds and many in number. (18) Alongwith some of his family members, all fully armed he offered the presents before Bharata. (19) He had a flying survey of the place. He saw Bharata sitting with his younger brother and ministers. He had a garment of barks. His bodily hue was that of a cloud and he had a crown of matted locks. (20) He was extremely grieved for Rāma and was muttering Rāma, Rāma. Guha saluted him, touching the ground with his head and said—"I am Guha." (21) Bharata immediately raised him and gave a good embrace with due respect. He quite cheerfully asked about his well-being and then said to him in a friendly way (22)

"Brother, you lived here with Rāma (even though for short time). The transparent hearted Rāma embraced you with tearful eyes. This way remembering Rāma again and again Bharata with tearful eyes went to the place where Rāma stayed with Guha during the night. He saw the place and the bed of Kuśa. (26-27) That place had some small particles of gold fallen from the ornaments of Sītā here and there. Seeing this his heart was scorched with pain and Bharata wept. (28) Oh, the highly tender Sītā, the daughter of Janaka, who used to sleep on a couch bedecked with gems on very soft bed alongwith Rāma. How could she have slept on a bed of Kuśa? It was all my fault. (29-30) Fie on me that I have been born of Kaikeyī, an embodiment of sin. It is due to me alone that the Paramātmā Rāma is troubled so much. (31) Oh, how blessed is the birth of Lakṣmaṇa, the great souled one, that he always follows Rāma even in the forest quite cheerfully. (32) If I could become a slave of those who are servants to the devotees of Rāma my birth could undoubtedly be successful. (33) Brother, if you know where Rāma is at present, tell me all that. I will immediately go to take him back. (34) Guha, realizing that Bharata is pure-hearted, said affectionately—"Deva, you are blessed that you have such a devotion to the lotus-eyed Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. Near the Chitrakut mount, not far from Mandākinī in the hermitage of Munis, Rāma is living with his younger brother and Jānakī. There is the Lord quite happy and comfortable. (35—37) We will go there very soon. You have to cross Gaṅgā here itself. Saying so he immediately went and brought five hundred boats for the army to cross the great river. He himself brought a royal boat, had Bharata, Śatrughna, Kausalyā and Vasiṣṭha boarded in that boat. In another one he got Kaikeyī and other women accommodated. (38—40) Crossing Gaṅgā they shortly reached the Āśrama of Bharadwāja. The army halted at some distance and Bharata with Śatrughna went in the Āśrama where they saw Muni seated like a burning fire. Bharata with full devotion prostrated himself. (41-42) Bharadwāja, the greatest among the Munis when knew that it was Bharata the son of Daśaratha, adored him with great affection. He asked Bharata who was having matted locks and in garments of bark, about his well being. (43) While looking after the state administration how is it so that you are clad in barks? What for did you come to the forest abided by the Munis? (44)

Having heard the words of Bharadwāja, Bharata shed tears and said—"O Lord, you know everything as you are all pervasive even then you ask something. It is only due to your grace. Whatever Kaikeyī did to obstruct the coronation of Rāma, and His exilement etc., I do not know at all. I swear by your feet O the best among Munis (that I am innocent). (45—47) Saying so he caught the feet of the Muni and became extremely sad and said—"O lord, you must know if I am innocent or guilty." (48) While Rāma is the king what have I to do with the kingdom? I am a servant of Rāma forever. (49) Going from here O best among the Munis, falling at the feet of Rāma I will offer all these preparations for coronation here itself in the forest and get him consecrated by Vasiṣṭha etc., and inhabitants of the capital and take Rāma, the spouse of Lakṣmī, back to Ayodhya and will serve him like the lowliest servant. Do not feel any grief. You are a better devotee to Rāma even than Lakṣmaṇa. (53) I have a desire to entertain you alongwith your army. O sinless one. Take food

Bharadwāja on his turn sipped water; observed silence and entered his hut meant for sacrificial oblations. (55) (There) he the fulfiller of desire, meditated upon Kāmadhenu, the wish-yielding cow. Śrī Mahādeva said—Bharata delightfully reached the Āśrama which was bedecked with the foot prints of Sītā and Rāma, sanctified and extremely beautiful. (1) He saw on the ground everywhere the foot prints of Śrī Rāma marked with the figures of Vajra, Aṅkuśa, Dhwaja and lotus; which were the most auspicious for the earth. Both Bharata and Śatrughna started rolling in the dust of Śrī Rāma's feet. (2)

O, how blessed I am that I am seeing the ground having the prints of lotus feet of Śrī Rāma which are always sought for by the leading gods like Brahmā and the Vedas. They are always desirous of the dust of Rāma's feet. (3) Bharata whose heart was overfull with the marvellous love; whose mind was fully occupied with the thoughts of Śrī Rāma, whose chest was wet with the tears of love, slowly reached the hutment of Śrī Rāma. (4) He saw there Śrī Rāma whose bodily hue was just like newly sprouts of Dūrvā grass, whose eyes were big, who had the crown of matted locks, who was clad with bark, a glowing and cheerful face just like the morning sun. (5) He was looking at Sītā while Lakṣmaṇa was adoring his feet. Seeing him in this condition the grieved Bharata rushed joyfully and held his feet quite hurriedly. (6) Rāma on his part between his two large arms, embraced stoutly and consecrated him with his tears. He seated him in his lap and the omnipresent Lord embraced him again and again. (7)

After that all the mothers came there in a hurry to see Rāma

like thirsty cows rush for the water. (8) Rāma, when saw his mother, he sprang up, fell down at her feet and bade his Praṇāma. Kausalyā on her part embraced the son, sad as she was, had tears in the eyes. (9) The delight of Raghus bade his Praṇāma to other mothers and then he saw that Vasiṣṭha the best among the Munis, has also arrived. (10) He prostrated before him and said repeatedly. "Blessed I am." Then Śrī Rāma seated everybody in a proper order. (11) He said—"Is my father alright? Very distressed as he was, did he communicate anything for me?" Then Vasiṣṭha said to him—"O, delight of Raghus, your father died due to the agony caused by your separation, only pondering over you, uttering Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. (13) Having heard these words, like lance to the ears from his Guru suddenly Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa both fell down crying—"O, we are done away with." (14) After that all including the mothers, wept together. Rāma said—"O father, O compassionate, where did you go leaving me? O great armed, now I have become orphan. Who will hereafter love and fondle me. Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa also wept bitterly. (15-16) Vasiṣṭha with his consoling words, pacified the grief. Then all of them went to Mandākinī and purified themselves with a dip into the river. (17) All of them offered water to the departed king who desired it. After that Rāma with Lakṣmaṇa offered Piṇḍa. (18)

"What we ourselves eat is the proper food for our manes—these are the injunctions of the Smṛtis" so deciding Rāma made Piṇḍa of Ingudi fruit applied honey (and offered). (19) So shedding sorrowful tears, again bathed and came back to his abode. The others also wept for long, took bath again and went to the Āśrama. (20) That day they all observed fast. The next day they took bath in the limpid water of Mandākinī, while Rāma was seated, Bharata said to him—"O Rāma, Mahābhāga, get yourself consecrated. (21-22) Administer the state of your father. Since you are the senior most, you are just like a father to me and since it is the Dharma of the Kṣatriyas to protect the subjects. (23) Performing various sacrifices, begetting sons for the continuation of family, coronating the son on the throne, then go to the forest. (24) Right now it is not the proper time for the forest-life. Be graceful to me. You do not behave to mind the evil deeds of my mother. Do protect us. (25)

Having said so putting both the feet of his brother on his head, with devotion he prostrated himself on the ground before Rāma. (26) Rāma on his part hurriedly took him in his lap with great love and spoke to him gently with tears in his eyes. (27) "Listen to me darling, I tell you it is just as you say. But the father asked me to live in the forest for fourteen years and then to enter the town. And the entire kingdom he gave to you then." (28-29) Quite explicitly the father gave this kingdom to you and you alone. Similarly the father gave me the kingdom of Daṇḍakāraṇya. (30) Therefore we both must scrupulously follow father's words. One who transgresses the father's words and acts arbitrarily, is a dead one during his life itself and goes to the hell after the death. Therefore you do look after the state and I will rule over the forest. (31-32) Bharata said to Rāma—"If the father, lascivious, foolish, henpecked, of a perverted sense, insane as he was, tells something (without considering pros and cons), it should not be taken to be genuine and authentic. Such utterances should not be taken at their face value as if they are spoken by sensible and wise one. (33)

Śrī Rāma said—"You should not have used words like henpecked, sex blinded or foolish for our father. The truthful king promised earlier and for the fear of violation of truth he granted the boons. (34) The great persons are frightened more from untruth than the hell. I also am trying to let it remain true what he promised to Kaikeyī. (35) How and why could I, being a descendant of Raghu, falsify his words. Having heard Rāma saying so, Bharata said—(36) "Alright I in the ascetic garment will live in the forest for fourteen years, O Suvrata! (one of the great vow). You on your part go and, enjoy the kingdom. (37)

Śrī Rāma said—"Father gave the kingdom to you and forest to me. If I do otherwise the untruth will remain as it is." (38)

Bharata said—"In that case) I also shall come and serve you like Lakṣmaṇa or else by abandoning food and drink I shall give up this body." (39) Having so decided Bharata spread Kuśa grass in the open sun and coming to a firm decision, he sat there facing east. (40) To see this type of obstinate decision Rāma was much amazed and he signalled something through slanting eyes to Vasiṣṭha. (41) Vasiṣṭha the foremost among the wise, took Bharata in a secluded corner and said—"Listen my child, my secret and decided words. (42) Rāma is Nārāyaṇa himself. He was requested by Brahmā in some previous Kalpas. To fulfil that he has appeared as the son of Daśaratha for killing Rāvaṇa. (43) His Yogmāyā became Sītā, the daughter of Janaka. Śeṣa also incarnated as Lakṣmaṇa who always follows him. (44) With the intention of killing Rāvaṇa they will go, there is no doubt. The boons of Kaikeyī and whatever harsh words she spoke, was all designed by the gods. Otherwise how could she have uttered such things? Therefore my dear Bharata, give up insisting for Rāma's return. (45-46) Go back to the capital accompanied by your mothers and the great army. Rāma after annihilating Rāvaṇa with the entire ogre race will soon come back. (47) Having heard what the Guru said Bharata was quite amazed. He went to Rāma with his eyes widened due to astonishment. (48) "O Rājendra, give me your adorable sandals for the state administration. Till you come back I will offer my services to them. (49) After saying so two beautiful sandals Bharata put in the feet of Śrī Rāma and Rāma on his part gave those sandals to Bharata with great love and affection. (50) Bharata again said to him in a voice choked with affection—"After the completion of fourteen years, on the very first day if you do not come back O Rāma, I will enter the great fire. "Saying 'alright' Rāma sent Bharata back. (53)

The wise Bharata with Vasiṣṭha and Śatrughna accompanied by army, mothers and ministers prepared for back journey. (54)

Kaikeyī in a secluded corner spoke to Rāma with tearful eyes and folded hands—"O Rāma, whatever I, the wicked minded and illusioned by Māyā, did to obstruct your coronation, you beleave to excuse me for that as the Sādhus are full of compassion. world does right or wrong, it is all inspired by you. (57) This world is under your control and being entirely unfree what can it do (on its own)? Just like the artificial puppets dance as directed by the juggler. (58) In the same way your Māyā, the dancing girl capable of adopting innumerable forms is also under your control. It is you intending to do in future the job for gods who motivated me to do this sinful act with evil intention, O vanquisher of the foes. Today I came to realise that you are beyond the reach of even gods. (59-60) O lord of the world, O endless one, O the supreme ruler of the universe, save me, my obeisance to you. Cut asunder the shackles of attachment in sons and wealth etc., with the sword of fire of your knowledge. I surrender to you. Hearing the words of Kaikeyī Rāma spoke smilingly—(61-62)

"O great lady, whatever you said of me is quite correct and not untrue. Whatever words came out of your mouth, it was all inspired by me. (63) (It was) for performing the divine mission. How can you be guilty for them? Go and always remember me day and night. (64) Purged of all attachment through my devotion you will very soon get liberation. I always look with the same eye. There is no body dear or hateful to me. Howsoever the seeker seeks me even so do I approach him. Mother, those deluded with my Māyā think that I am a

Fortunately you have now got that knowledge which is the remover of the fear of birth and death and which helps to realise me. (65-67) Remembering me always stay in the palace. Actions will no more bind you. Having been so said she circumambulated Rāma. She was overwhelmed by delight and amazement. She made Praṇāma hundreds of times and went home happily. Bharata alongwith the ministers, mothers and Guru soon returned to Ayodhya on the way contemplating on Rāma. Having settled all the citizens in Ayodhya, the great souled Bharata himself went to Nandigram. There he installed those sandals on the throne and with great devotion worshipped like Śrī Rāma himself. (68—71) (He adored them) with Gandha, flowers, unbroken rice and other Pūjā materials befitting to the royal worshipping everyday regularly. (72) Taking only fruits and roots as his food, his senses quite within his control, matted locks on the head and garments of bark, sleeping on the ground, observing complete celibacy alongwith Śatrughna, Bharata looked after all administrative affairs whatsoever in the whole world. He submitted everything to those sandals. (73-74) Counting days, desiring Rāma's return he dedicated his heart and soul to Rāma and stayed just like a Brahmarṣi. (75)

lived for sometime accompanied by Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa and surrounded by several Munis. (76) The nearby citizens knowing the whereabouts of Rāma with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa in Chitrakuta, inspired by the acute desire to have a vision of Rāma frequently visited that place. (77) Rāma left that mountain as it was being crowded (day by day). He also thought that he had to fulfil his mission in Daṇḍaka. (78) Accompanied by Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa he reached the beautiful Āśrama of Atri. It was everywhere worth living in and free from crowd. (79) There He approached the Muni who was filling the sacred grove with his splendour. Rāma prostrated before him and said—"I am Rāma paying my obeisance to you." (80) In compliance with my father's orders I have come to Daṇḍaka even though exiled in the forest I am blessed as I could have your vision. (81) Hearing Rāma's words and knowing Rāma to be the supreme Lord, the Muni worshipped him in the prescribed manner with great devotion. (82) After Rāma, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa took their seats the Muni entertained them with wild fruits. The fully satisfied Muni spoke—(83) "My wife quite old one known as Anasūyā, has been practising austerity for a long time. She knows Dharma and loves it. (84) She is inside the Āśrama. Sītā may meet her, O killer of foes. Rāma the lotus eyed one asked Sītā. (85) "Go, bid your Praṇāma and come

She was overjoyed and embraced her while respectfully addressing her as 'Sītā my child'. (87) She gave two divine earrings made by Viśwakarmā and two taintless and sanctified garments with all possible devotion, and that beautiful faced Anasūyā also gave a divine Aṅgarāga (some cosmetics) and said to Sītā "O lotus faced one, due to this Aṅgarāga the beauty will never dissipate you." (90) Then she served deserving food to Rāma alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa and said to him with her hands folded—(91) "Hey Rāma, it is you who created all the fourteen Bhuwanas. Then for their preservation you assumed the guise of gods human and subhuman creatures yet you are never tainted with the qualities of the said bodies. Your Māyā who deludes the entire creation is also afraid of you." (92)

Śrī Mahādeva said—Spending that day there, the next morning the delight of Raghus, having taken his bath, with the permission of Muni prepared for his further journey. (1) "O Muni, we are going to the Dandaka forest, adorned by groups of sages, (is inhabited) You behave to permit us. (2) And (it will be kind of you if) you order your disciples to show us the path." Having heard the words of Rāma Atri of a great fame, laughed and said to Rāma—"Hey Rāma, the shelter of gods, you are a guide to everybody. Who can become your guide? Yet since you are imitating the worldly way, (my disciples) will guide you. (3-4) So instructing the disciples, the Muni himself went alongwith Rāma for some distance (to see him off). Rāma affectionately requested him not to go further so Atri went to his home. (5) After covering some two miles Rāma, the lotus eyed one, saw a big river and asked the disciples of Atri—(6) "Is there any means or not to cross the river?" They replied to him that there was a strong boat. (7)

We ourselves will take you to the other shore within a moment. Thereafter they got Sītā, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa boarded in the boat and crossed the river within no time. After that being sufficiently praised by Śrī Rāma, all of them went to the Āśrama of Atri. (8-9)

They reached a dense forest echoing with the sounds of crickets, crowded with different varieties of wild animals, terrifying due to the presence of lions and tigers. (10) Entering the forest occupied by the fierce looking Rākṣasas frightfully thrilling, Rāma said to Lakṣmaṇa. (11) "Hereafter we should keep very very alert. I and you both must have our bows strung and arrows held in the hand. (12) I will be heralding followed by you with ready bow and arrow. In between us there will be Sītā like the Māyā in between Ātmā and Paramātmā. (13) Have your eyes covering all quarters. There is danger from the demons in this Dandaka forest, so I have heard O vanquisher of the foes. (14) Conversing this way, they both covered one and half Yojanas (about 12 to 15 miles). They came to a small pond full of flowers like Kahlāra, Kumuda, Utpala and Kamala having cool water upto the brim, it looked beautiful. Going there drinking the pure water they sat under the shade of a tree near the water front for sometime and then they saw a big frightening and exceptionally strong creature coming. (15—17) The big and dreadful teeth in his mouth creating terror with his roar, a lance on his left shoulder in which many human bodies were stuck at the top. (18) Eating elephants, tigers and buffalos he appeared in the forest. Rāma, having his bow stringed and arrow set, said to Lakṣmaṇa. (19)

"Look brother, this huge bodied Rākṣasa has come. He is coming before us and towards us, a source of terror to the cowards. (20) Get ready with your bow and O Janakanandinī, have no fear at all. Saying so Rāma with arrow stood like a mountain. (21) He, seeing Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and Jānakī, laughed aloud and trying to frighten them spoke thus. (22) "Who are you two holding arrow and quiver, with matted locks of the hair, the bark garment on your body, in the guise of monks, quite young, a lady with you, looking proud of your might. (23) Beautiful you are equalling to a morsel for me. Why have you come to this dreadful forest inhabited by the serpents." (24) Hearing the words of the Rākṣasa Rāma smiled and said to him, I am Rāma, he is my brother Lakṣmaṇa very dear to me. This is Sītā my dearest wife. We have come complying our father's instructions and for punishing people like you. (25-26) Having heard these words of Rāma he burst into laughter. Widening his mouth, swiftly taking the lance in his hand (said)

Don't you know me Rāma? I am Virādha known to the whole world. Due to fear from me all the Munis fled away deserting this forest. (27-28) If there is desire for life you leave Sītā and your weapons. Run away, pronto. Otherwise I will soon eat both of you. (29)

So saying the Rākṣasa came running to seize of Sītā. Rāma on his part cut asunder smilingly his two arms with his arrow. (30) Thereafter furious with anger, widening his frightful mouth rushed at Rāma and Rāma on his part while the Rākṣasa was running, cut away his two legs. It looked something very surprising. (31-32) Then crawling like snake he charged as if he would swallow Rāma with his mouth. Then with a crescent shaped arrow Rāma cut his huge head and due to the profuse bleeding he fell down on the earth. Sītā then embraced Rāma, the best among Raghus and praised him. (33-34) Thereafter the kettledrums sounded played upon by gods. The Apsarās danced and the Gandharvas and Kinnaras presented music. (35) Out of the dead body of Virādha came out a man charmingly handsome, clad in fine garments, resplendent with the ornaments made of heated gold just like the sun in the sky. (36) Saluting Rāma, the remover of the devotee's woes, deliverer from the worldly ocean, compassionate; he with a limpid mind again saluted Rāma, remover of all miseries of those who took shelter in him by prostrating before him. (37)

Virādhā said—"Hey Rāma, of big eyes like lotus petals, I was a Vidyādhara quite splendrous one. I was cursed by the sage Durvāsā who is known for his unprovoked anger. Today you have released me from that." (38) Hereafter let your lotus feet be always in my memory for subsiding the miseries of the world; my tongue may always do the Saṅkīrtana of your name; my ears may drink the nectar of your stories; the two hands of mine may always adore your lotus feet and my head may always bow down to offer Pranāma in your two feet. (39-40) My obeisance to you, O Lord, the embodiment of pure knowledge; to your form of Rāma who always takes delight in his ownself; to you in the form of creator and manifested as the couple of Sītā and Rāma. (41) Hey Rāma, I have taken refuge in you. Save me. Now I will go with your permission to heaven, O best among the Raghus. Let your Māyā not envelop me. (42) Having been so prayed Rāma in a cheerful disposition, the great soul propitiated with his prayers, granted Virādhā the boon. (43)

O Vidyādhara go. You have now transcended all the good and bad qualities of my Māyā. After having my vision, O best among the wise, you are liberated. (44) My devotion in the world is hard to attain and if attained it gives liberation. Therefore you equipped with my devotion and with my permission go to the supreme abode. (45) Thus Rāma released the dreadful Rākṣasa from the curse by killing him and granted desired boon also. He restored his Vidyādhara form. A person muttering Rāma Nāma achieves every accomplishment. (46)

Thus ends canto I of Aranyakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—After Virādha departed for heaven Rāma accompanied by Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa went to the comfortable sacred grove of Śarabhaṅga. (1) The wise Śarabhaṅga, when saw Rāma coming alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa, hurriedly got up. (2) Going ahead (to receive) he performed adoration, seated them on the mats and entertained them with beetroots and fruits. (3) Śarabhaṅga submitted with love to Rāma, the lover of his devotees—"I have been living here for a long time, determined to practise penances aspiring all the way for your vision. Hey Rāma, you are the supreme lord. Whatever virtue I have acquired through my austerity, all that I offer to you today and then I will attain liberation. (4-5) Dedicating huge amount of his virtues to Rāma that dispassionate Yogī Śarabhaṅga bidding Praṇāma to Rāma the inscrutable and Sītā, he suddenly climbed on the pyre. (6) Meditating upon Rāma abiding in all hearts whose bodily hue was just like the sprouts of Dūrvā grass, whose eyes were like lotus, clad by the garment befitting to the ascetics, his soft locks arranged and matted, in the company of Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. (7) (He thought) who else other than Rāma, is so kind as to prove a wish-yielding cow in the world, only by remembering him? I always remembered him single-mindedly. He knew the act of my remembering and so he himself came to me. (8) Let Rāma, the lord of gods, the son of Daśaratha, the overlord, look at me. By burning my body, I, quite sinless go to the supreme abode of Brahma. (9) Be that lord of Ayodhya, Rāma always in my heart whose left side is graced by Sītā as lightning in the cloud. (10) In this way contemplating over Rāma for a long time, seeing him in person before him he suddenly kindled the fire, burning his phenomenal body of five elements, transformed into a divine figure went to the abode of the lord of three worlds. After that all the sages residing in Dandaka forest came to the abode of Śarabhaṅga for the vision of Śrī Rāma. (11-12) Observing the group of Munis, Jānakī, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa having human guise through Māyā saluted them taking their heads to the ground. (13)

The Munis (on their part) greeted Rāma who abides in every heart, through their blessings. And with their folded hands they said to Rāma, the holder of bow and arrow. (14) Supplanted by Brahmā, you have taken birth to relieve the burden of the earth. We know you are Hari, Jānakī is Lakṣmī and Lakṣmaṇa a fraction of Śeṣa, Bharata is the conch and Śatrughna the disc. So start your mission with removing the miseries of Rṣis here. (15-16) O best among the Raghus, do come, we will go to see all the Āśramas of the Munis one by one. When you with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa (see them personally) your compassion for us will get strengthened. (17) Having been so requested by them with folded hands Rāma went alongwith them to see the Āśramas of Munis. (18) He saw there a number of skulls fallen here and there and the heaps of bones also and Rāma spoke. (19) "Whose bones are these and why are they lying like that?" The Munis replied to Rāma—"These are heads of the Rṣis. (20) These Rṣis were

Adored always by the Munis residing in the forest Rāma alongwith Jānakī and Lakṣmaṇa lived there for a few years. In this way the omnipresent Rāma visiting the Āśramas of Ṛṣis one by one came to the Āśrama of Sutīkṣṇa which was crowded by renowned Ṛṣis, visited by all the seasons and comfortable throughout the year. (25) Having come to know the arrival of Rāma, Sutīkṣṇa himself came. He was the disciple of Agastya and had engaged himself in the Upāsanā of Rāmamantra. He worshipped him properly. His eyes were extremely eager with devotion. (26)

Sutīkṣṇa said—O Lord of Sītā, having innumerable qualities, O inscrutable, I mutter only your Mantra. O sweet looking Rāma, even Śiva and Brahmā take refuge in your feet which are the only strong boat to cross the ocean of the world. Lord, I am just a slave of your devotees. Your Māyā disappears from those who are devoted to your Mantra. You like a king award them according to their service. By virtue of being witness to everything even though you are beyond perception to the wicked ones yet you are always pleased with those whose heart is purified by your Mantra. But may this very (human form) which I am seeing before me be always present in my heart. Apart from this I want nothing. (34)

After he so praised, Rāma spoke with a smiling face, "O Muni, I know your Citta (mind or inner senses) has become pure due to worshipping me. (35) So I have come to see you—you who have no means other than me. Persons practising my Mantra in the world, exclusively surrender to me. (36) I am visible everyday to them who desire nothing from the world, and are exclusively devoted to me. Whosoever reads this Stotra (prayer) composed by you and always dear to me, will attain my devotion and the knowledge uncontaminated. And you due to my Upāsanā, will remain in this world liberated in everyway. (37-38) After your death you will undoubtedly get my Sāyujya. Now I wish to meet your Guru—the sage Agastya. My mind is extremely eager to live there for sometime". (39) Sūtīkṣṇa also approved of the idea and said—"You will go tomorrow O, Rāghava. I shall also come. It is long ago since I have seen the great Muni." (40)

Canto III

Meeting with Agastya

श्रीमहादेव उवाच

Śrī Mahādeva said—Thereafter Rāma accompanied by Sūtīkṣṇa, Jānakī and Lakṣmaṇa reached the Āśrama of the younger brother of Agastya (Agnijihva) by the noon. (1) Properly adored by the Muni, taking roots and fruits for food, the next day getting up in the morning they started for the Āśrama of Agastya. (2) That Āśrama of Agastya full of fruits and flowers in all the seasons, with plenty of animals, echoing with the chirping of birds, similar to Nandana Vana (the garden of Indra). (3) Abided by Brahmarṣis and Devarṣis bedecked by many Āśramas of Munis on all sides, looked auspicious, like the next Brahmaloka (the abode of Brahṁā). (4) Stopping out of the Āśrama Rāma said to Sūtīkṣṇa—"Sūtīkṣṇa, go there soon and report to the Muni Agastya about my arrival alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. "Very well" so saying he went to his Guru's Āśrama quickly, which was crowded by a number of Rṣis. Surrounded by the Rṣis particularly the devotees of Rāma, Agastya was seated and was explaining to his disciples the real purport of Rāmamantra with great devotion. Seeing that way Agastya the best among the Munis, Sutīkṣṇa went to him. (5—8) The wise Sutīkṣṇa with all the humility prostrated himself— "O Brahman, Rāma, the son of Daśaratha, has come alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa to see you and is waiting outside with folded hands." (9)

Agastya said— "Be it well to you. Quick. Bring in Rāma who is seated in my heart. I am here desiring (his arrival) and meditating on him". (10) Saying so he immediately got up alongwith the Munis, quickly went to Rāma with high devotion and said to him. (11) "Come on Rāma. May God bless you. Fortunately we are meeting you. A most beloved guest I have got in you. This day of mine is most fruitful and blessed." (12) Rāma also alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa thrilled with joy prostrated on the ground. (13) Swiftly the Muni took Rāma up in his arms and embraced him with great devotion horripilated by the touch of Śrī Rāma's body, his eyes were blurred with tears. (14) He, the bull among the Munis took Rāma's hand by his hand and went to his Āśrama with delighted mind. (15) The Muni accommodated him comfortably on a mat, adored and served wild and various appropriate eatables. (16) When Rāma, his face resplendent like moon sat in a secluded place, the mighty Rṣi Agastya said to him, his hands folded. (17) Hey Rāma, when Brahmā in the ancient times requested you on the banks of milky ocean to unburden the earth and kill Rāvaṇa since that very time I have been waiting for you practising penances and meditating only on you; living here alongwith Munis. (18-19) Before the creation you were alone undifferentiated and attributeless. Your Māyā wholly depending upon you and solely belonging to you is known to be your Śakti (power). (20) When your Śakti (Māyā) envelops you, the attributeless then the Vedāntika people call it (Brahma enveloped by Māyā) Avyākṛta. (21) Some people refer to Māyā as Mūlaprakṛti while others call it Māyā. Still others Avidyā, still some others call it Saṁsāra and bondage. So this is called by so many names. (22) Having been disbalanced by you she gives birth to Mahat then again inspired by you Ahaṁkāra is sprouted from Mahat. (23) Ahaṁkāra pervaded by Mahat is of threefold—Sāttvika, Rājasa and Tāmasa. (24)

From the Tāmāsa ego come the subtle Tanmātrās (sound, touch, form, taste and smell). And thenceforth come five gross elements (ether, air, fire, water and earth) respectively according to their respective qualities (the number of Guṇas go on increasing from one to the other. Ether having only sound as its Guṇa, air two—sound and touch, fire three—sound, touch and form, water four—sound, touch, form and taste while earth has five—sound, touch, form, taste and smell.) (25) From the Rājasa Ahaṁkāra emanates the sense and motor organs and Sāttvika Ahaṁkāra produces the presiding deities of the Indriyas and the mind. And all these taken collectively in their subtle form gave birth to all pervading Hiraṇyagarbha (the subtle body). (26) From the gross elements came Virāṭ. From Virāṭ Puruṣa came the universe consisting of mobile and immobile beings like gods, sub-human and human according to the time and their action. You adopting the Rajoguṇa became Brahmā the cause of the whole universe, from your Sāttvika aspect, You are Viṣṇu the sustainer as the wise ones say. At the time of final dissolutionment you become Rudra so differentiated as per the modes of your Māyā. (27—29) Wakefulness, dream and deep slumber—these three conditions (Vṛttis) are the respective results of three types (Sāttvika, Rājasa and Tāmāsa) of intellect are altogether different (from the above mentioned categories). You are simply a witness, consciousness personified and immutable. (30)

Whenever you want to do your Līlā of creation then you take help of Māyā and appear as if wielding attributes. (31) Rāma, your Māyā is of two types—Vidyā and Avidyā. Those who are busily active in the mundane affairs are under the sway of Avidyā. Those who follow the path of renunciation and contemplate the Vedantic principles and always practise your devotion, are known as under the sway of Vidyā. Those who are caught by Avidyā are always engrossed in the mundane affairs but those, practising Vidyā are ever liberated. (32-33) Vidyā manifests itself to those who are your staunch devotees and who always practise your Mantra. Vidyā comes to nobody else. (34) Therefore those equipped with your devotion are liberated; no doubt. Those who are devoid of the nectar of your devotion cannot even dream of liberation. (35) Hey Rāma, it is of no use to say much. I am telling you some essentials. It is the company of holy men that is said to be the only causal factor to liberation. (36) Those Sādhus whose mind is equanimous to all, who are desireless, whose wishes came to an end, who have full control over their Indriyas (sense) or calm and your devotees who are bereft of all desires, who are equal in favourable and unfavourable conditions, who are completely detached, who have renounced all their actions, who are abiding in the Brahma, who are possessed of all qualities like restraint, are satisfied with whatever little they get—when one gets the holy company of such persons then he gets inculcated in him the craving to hear your stories and ultimately develops the devotion to you, O Rāma the eternal one! When your devotion is achieved all knowledge spontaneously dawns. (37—40) This (knowledge) is the first and foremost path adopted by the wise people. Therefore Hey Rāghava, your devotion based on pure love be in me, particularly I may have association of devotees. Today due to your direct vision my life has been fruitful. (41—42) O lord, today all my sacrifices are fructified. I have practised exclusively and single-mindedly penances for a long time. It is the result of that austerity that I am opportuned to your worship. (43) O Rāghava, abide always in my heart alongwith Sītā whether I am walking or staying but, may I always remember you. (44) So praying, Agastya, the best among the Munis gave to Rāma the bow which was presented by Indra in the remote past for Rāma. (45) Two inexhaustible quivers full of arrows and a sword bedecked with gems (and said) O Rāghava, kill all the Rākṣasas who have become burden to the earth for which you have incarnated yourself in the human guise through your Māyā. From hereonwards some two Yojanas (20 miles) away there is an Āśrama on the banks of Gautamī named Panchavati covered by sacred groves. Hey Rāma, you should pass the remaining time there. (46—48)

(49) Thereafter the omniscient lord Rāma listening to the lovely speech of and prayer pregnant of significant meaning offered by Muni Agastya; obtaining his permission the happy and all-pervading lord went through the path shown by him. to you. There may come a time when you will go on hunting errand and Lakṣmaṇa also may (leave the place) at that time I will make every effort to protect Sītā, daughter of Janaka. Hearing those words of vulture Rāma affectionately said—(4-6) "Well said, vulture king. Do favour to me as you please while living in nearby place in the forest not far from me. (7) This way having permitted and embracing Jaṭāyu the lord alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa went to Panchavati. Reaching the banks of Gautamī at Panchavati Rāma got a big hutment prepared by clever Lakṣmaṇa. (8-9) There they lived on the northern bank of the river which was covered by the fruit trees like Kadamba, Panasa, Āmra etc. (10) Rāma entertaining Sītā in a place secluded, not frequently visited by people, healthy, like another heaven, settled there alongwith Lakṣmaṇa, the learned one. Lakṣmaṇa who always thought of the services to be rendered to Rāma, everyday brought and gave the beet roots and fruits to them and himself holding bow and arrow woke throughout the night quite vigilantly. (11—13) All the three daily took bath in the water of Gautamī. While coming or going Sītā always used to be in between the two. (14)

Lakṣmaṇa brought the water everyday quite cheerfully and served them with love day in and day out. This way the three comfortably lived there. (15) One day when Rāma was alone

Lakṣmaṇa asked the lord with the utmost humility. (16) O lord I want to listen from you O having eyes like lotus petals, the infallible means of Mokṣa. You behave to tell me briefly, O best among the Raghus. Kindly tell me Jñāna coupled with Vijñāna enriched by devotion and dispassion as there is no other preceptor on the earth like you. (17-18)

Śrī Rāma said—"Listen to me my dear, I will tell the extremely guarded secret knowing which a man has all the delusions wiped out. (19) Firstly I will tell you the form and nature of Māyā, then the means of knowledge, then the Jñāna coupled with Vijñāna and finally Paramātmā the only knowable, knowing which the man is freed from all the fear. Assuming the insentient body to be Ātmā is Māyā, which creates this world. Two forms of the Māyā have already been described, O delighter of the family. (20—22) The first is Vikṣepa (superimposition) and the second is Āvaraṇa (the power of obscuring). The first one creates all the gross and subtle creation right from Mahattatva to Brahmā. (23) The second one stays enveloping the entire knowledge. This universe designed by Māyā appears in attributeless Paramātmā like snake in the rope. It is due to the delusion. After properly thinking it proves to be a negation, whatever a man hears, perceives or remembers, it is all non-existent like a dream and an imagination. It is only the body which is said to be a strong root of the world tree. (24—26) It is because of the body that there is the bondage of kinship with the son and wife etc., otherwise the Ātmā has nothing to do with them. (27) The five gross elements, five Tanmātrās, ego (Ahaṁkāra), Buddhi, the ten Indriyas, the apparent consciousness, mind and original Prakṛti—these twenty-four are collectively known as Kṣetra (the field) and the body itself is known as Kṣetra. (28-29) The immutable Paramātmā in the form of Jīva is quite different from them. Now you listen from me the means through which the Jīva can be known. (30) Jīva and Paramātmā are synonymous and not to be taken different. Keeping away from the pride, snobbery and injury to others. (31) Bearing the censorious words from others, everywhere straightforwardness, service of the preceptor—mental, oral and bodily with devotion. (32) Purity—external and internal, steadfastness for good deeds, restraint over mind, speech and body, disinclination towards the sense-objects. (33) Absence of ego, pondering over the pros and cons of birth and old age etc., detachment, absence of affinity with son, wife and wealth etc. (34) Mental equilibrium when faced with favourables and unfavourables focussing the intellect exclusively in Me that is Rāma who am all pervading. (35) Living in secluded and pure places and disliking the company of worldly people. (36) Ceaseless effort for the knowledge of the self, always studying and appreciating the contents of Vedas. All these enumerated above are conducive to knowledge and antithesis to it results in ignorance. (37) I am quite different from the intellect, vital airs, mind, body, and Ahaṁkāra etc., and am always pure, always wakeful, always conscious Ātmā—this should be firmly believed. (38)

When somebody recognises his real conscious form, this stage is called Jñāna and when he himself directly experiences it, it is Vijñāna. (39) The Ātmā is always and everywhere complete and perfect, consciousness and bliss, immutable, bereft of limiting factors like Buddhi etc., devoid of any change in its nature. (40) The self luminous Ātmā illumines the (worldly objects) body etc., and himself quite unveiled, the one without second with the characteristic marks of existence and knowledge. (41) Quite indifferent, self resplendent, witness of all which can be realized only through Vijñāna. When from the preachings of Ācāryas and Śāstras the identity of Jīva and Brahma fully dawns. (42) At that very time Mūlāvidyā merges alongwith its effects and their causes in Paramātmā. (43) This stage is known as Mukti. The supposition of Mukti as freedom from bondage in Ātmā, is only an assumption (otherwise) the Ātmā is innately ever free. This is the form and nature of Mokṣa explained to you, O delighter of Raghus. (44) It is the very nature of mine

e.g., Paramātmā which I narrated to you with Jñāna, Vijñāna, Vairāgya (dispassion). But I suppose it is very difficult for those who are not inclined towards My devotion. (45) Though equipped with eyes one does not see even his feet in the darkness of the night but in the light of the lamp it is fully visible. (46) Similarly otherwise imperceptible Ātmā can be perceived by those equipped with My devotion. Now I will tell you some causative factors of My devotion. Listen attentively. (47)

The holy company of my devotees, constant service to me and my devotees, Ekādaśī fast etc., celebrating the festivities related to me. (48) Taking delight always in hearing, reciting and explaining my Kathā, staunch faith in my worship and chanting of my names. (49) This way those who are always engaged in this thing or that about me get uncontaminated and get exclusive devotion to me. And then what else remains? (50) Thus he who is exclusively devoted to me gets all the three—Jñāna, Vijñāna and Vairāgya and eventually Mokṣa. (51) I have told you all what you asked. Concentrating the mind in this, anybody can obtain liberation. (52) Care should be taken that it is not transmitted to those who are wanting in my devotion. On the contrary it must be given to my devotees even by calling them and making great effort in this matter. (53)

He who recites it daily with faith and admiration gets the curtain of darkness in the form of ignorance destroyed and

becomes released. (54) The liberation is always within approach and myself always before his eyes who performs my worship and who is serviceable to my devotees whose inner senses are purified and who is very calm and peaceful, who has acquired the uncontaminated knowledge, and he who keeps the company of such persons readily and with exclusive devotion. Apart from this there is no other means to have my vision. (55)

Śrī Mahādeva said—At that time and in that great forest there was a mighty ogress who could assume any form as she wished. She was abiding in Janasthana and moved around in the jungle. (1) One day on the banks of Gautamī near Panchavati she happened to see the foot prints of the lord which were marked by auspicious marks like lotus, Vajra (thunderbolt) and Aṅkuśa (goad). (2) Seeing them she was sex intoxicated bewitched by the beauty of his feet. Looking for and following those foot prints she reached the Āśrama of Śrī Rāma. (3) There she saw the Lord of Lakṣmī sitting with Sītā, charming like

What is your purpose here, tell me. (5) I myself am Śūrpaṇakhā, an ogress, capable of assuming any form, the sister of the great ogre king and great souled Rāvaṇa. (6) I live here in this forest alongwith my brother Khara. This entire province has been allocated to me by the king where I live and eat the sages. (7) I wish to know all about you. Do speak, O best of the speakers: Rāma said to her—"Myself is Rāma the son of king of Ayodhya. (8) This is my lovely wife Sītā and that is my younger brother Lakṣmaṇa, extremely beautiful. (9) What service can I render to you O the beautiful among the three worlds. Having heard Rāma so saying the lovelorn Śūrpaṇakhā so said—(10) O Rāma, come alongwith me and let us sexually enjoy in some of the groves on the mountain. Agitated by sex I cannot leave you, the lotus eyed one. (11)

Rāma cast of side glance at Sītā and said smilingly—"It is my wife, the auspicious one ever accompanying" (12) How can you stay with me tolerating the inconveniences from a co-wife. Outside there is my brother Lakṣmaṇa extremely handsome. (13) He will be a suitable husband for you. Go and enjoy his company. Having been so said she said to Lakṣmaṇa "Be my

(15) Lakṣmaṇa replied—"O chaste lady, I am a slave of that wise person. You will become a maid servant. What will be more miserable than that? (16) Go back to him alone. He is the king of all. May god bless you. Hearing so she again came back to Rāma. This time she had some evil intention. (17) She said angrily—"O Rāma the fickle minded, why are you sending me to and fro? Just now I will eat away Sītā right before you." (18) Saying so she assumed a hideous figure and rushed towards Sītā. Then Lakṣmaṇa sword in his hand catching hold of her chopped off her nose and two ears very swiftly. Then she made an uproar by crying and with a face besmeared by blood hurriedly fell down in front of Khara while weeping in a harsh voice. Khara on his part asked her in a louder tone—"What is it? (19—21) Who is it who wants to go in the jaws of death. Who did this to you? Speak I will kill him within a moment even if he is like death itself." (22)

She spoke to him—"Rāma accompanied by Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa lives on the bank of Godāvarī freeing the Dandaka forest from all fear. (23) His brother signalled by him did it to me. If you are of a noble descent and brave kill those two

(25) Hearing that, extremely agitated with anger, Khara immediately directed fourteen thousand ogres of dreadful activities, to Rāma to kill him. Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśirā equipped with various weapons came soon to Rāma. Hearing their tumultuous sound Rāma said to Lakṣmaṇa. (26—28) "This great noise is audible. Decidedly the ogres are coming. Definitely there will be a fierce battle between them and me. (29) Take Sītā with you, go to the cave, stay there, O mightiest one! I wish to annihilate all the dreadful looking ogres. (30) No argument is permitted. You are sworn by me." Be it so' said Lakṣmaṇa and went to cave with Sītā. (31)

Rāma girding up his loin, took his mighty bow and two quivers full of arrows and inexhaustible, he tied and became ready. (32) The ogres arriving there started hurling weapons of various kinds and even rocks and trees. (33) Rāma on his part cut those weapons in pieces within no time and then shooting thousands of arrows killed all the Rākṣasas. (34) After that he took Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśirā and killed them within half a Prahara (about ninety minutes). (35)

Lakṣmaṇa also took Sītā from the cave and handed over to Rāma. He was amazed to see all the ogres killed. (36) Sītā with her lotus face delighted, embraced Rāma and washed the wounds caused by the weapons on his body. (37)

On the otherside Śūrpaṇakhā, the sister of Rāvaṇa observing all those Rākṣasas killed, rushed up to Lanka, reached the court of Rāvaṇa, crying bitterly, fell on the ground near his feet. Seeing his sister quite frightened Rāvaṇa said to her. (38-39) "Get up my sister. This disfiguring of yours done by whosoever whether Indra, Yama, Varuṇa, or even Kubera—I will burn him to ashes within no time. Speak." Then the ogress said to Rāvaṇa—"You are not only careless but also a fool. (40-41) Always fond of drinking you have become henpecked and impotent. You are devoid of your spying eyes. How will you retain your kingship. (42) Khara, Dūṣaṇa, Triśirā and fourteen thousand mighty Rākṣasas have been killed in the battle. (43) They were killed within a moment by Rāma, the enemy of Asuras and made the entire Janasthana free of fear to the Munis and you have no such information at all. Rāma? Why and how has he killed the Rakṣasas, tell me in detail, I will finish them root and branch. (45)

Śūrpaṇakhā said—"Once per chance I went to the bank of Godāvarī from Janasthana. There is a place Panchavati by name formerly abided by Munis. (46) There I saw in an Āśrama Rāma, lotus eyed, holding bow and arrow, the beautiful, adorned by matted locks and bark garments. (47) His younger brother Lakṣmaṇa is also equally handsome. His wife having big eyes, beautiful form like another Lakṣmī. (48) Among the gods, Gandharvas, Nāgas and humans that type of beauty is neither seen nor heard of. That auspicious lady is just lightening the forest. (49) I tried to abduct her to be your wife O sinless one. His mighty brother named Lakṣmaṇa chopped my nose and ears off instigated by Rāma. Then weeping with great pain I went to Khara. (50-51) He too along with the Rākṣasa army came to Rāma and fought. The mighty Rāma annihilated them all within no time. Those Rākṣasas of terrific valour were destroyed. If Rāma is so intent he can burn all the three worlds to ashes within half a moment, there is no doubt, so it appears to me. If Sītā could become your wife your life would be meaningful. (52—54) Therefore, O king of kings make efforts so that she could become your wife. Sītā, with eyes like lotus petal is the only beautiful lady in all the worlds with no match to her. (55) But you cannot stand O lord before Rāma in person. So only with some trickery delude him, the best among the Raghus. Only that way you can get her. (56) Having heard all that Rāvaṇa consoled her with soothing words by giving gifts and respect, the king Rāvaṇa entered his inner apartment. He was worried so he could not get a sound sleep in the night. (57)

(He thought) O, how simply a man like Rāma could destroy my brother Khara who was full of strength, valour and pride? (58) Or else Rāma is not a human being but the Paramātmā himself requested by Brahmā has incarnated in the guise of man and in the family of Raghus accompanied by his armies to kill me alongwith my forces. (59) If I am killed by Paramātmā, I will enjoy the kingdom of Vaikuṇṭha or else I will continue to enjoy the Rākṣasa kingdom for a long time to come. Therefore I must go to Rāma. (60) So planning the king of all the Rākṣasas came to the conclusion that Rāma himself is supreme Lord. Now I will go to him as an opponent since through devotion the Lord cannot be propitiated so soon. (61)

Thus ends canto V of Aranyakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—Pondering over the matter in this way during the night, coming to a decision about his future plan the talented Rāvaṇa in the morning sitting in a chariot went to the abode of Mārīca on the other shore of the ocean. Mārīca at that time in the garb of a Muni, with matted locks and garment of bark was meditating in his heart, the Paramātmā even though beyond the Guṇas yet illuminator of the Guṇas. After the end of his Samādhi he saw Rāvaṇa, the visitor, to his home. (1-3) Quickly he got up and after embracing he adored him in a befitting manner. After Rāvaṇa was seated and entertained properly Mārīca said—(4) "(It is strange) that you have come alone in a single chariot. You look somewhat worried and perhaps thinking of some project in your heart. (5) If not a secret, if justifiable and not incriminating, tell me, I will do it for your pleasure. (6)

Rāvaṇa said—"There is a king Daśaratha, the lord of Saketa.

His eldest son is Rāma by name, truthful and valorous. (7) The king exiled his son (Rāma) to the forest who liked or is liked by wild tribes, alongwith his wife and brother Lakṣmaṇa. (8) He is now living in the dreadful forest at Panchavati in his beautiful hermitage. His wife Sītā having big eyes, is very beautiful enchanting the whole world. (9) Rāma did kill my innocent Rākṣasas who were splendidly valorous and also Khara and he is living in the forest comfortably quite carefree. (10) He, chopped off the nose and ears of Śūrpaṇakhā my sister, for no fault of her and still the wicked fellow is staying in the forest without fear. (11) Therefore with your help going there I will kidnap her wife in the absence of Rāma. (12) You in the guise of an illusory deer will take away Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa from the hermitage; in the meantime I will kidnap Sītā. (13) After rendering this much help you will come here and live as usual. Mārīca was quite amazed while Rāvaṇa was so speaking. (14)

Who has advised you such an idea which may destroy (the entire ogre race). It is he who is your enemy and deserves death at your hand as he wants to destroy you. (15) I still shudder when I remember in my heart the valour of Rāma. Even though he was just a child when he went to protect the sacrifice of Viśwāmitra and hit me with one single arrow and hurled me in the ocean crossing a distance of one hundred Yojanas (one thousand miles). It is since then that I am so terrified that by remembering him again and again I see only Rāma everywhere. (16-18) Even in Dandaka once I went there in the forest recollecting my previous enmity with him in my heart. (This time also) I was in the form of a deer with very sharp horns surrounded by so many deers like me. (19) There I saw Rāma accompanied by Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. I very swiftly rushed to kill him and he after seeing me threw simply one arrow. (20) It struck my chest and I whirling in the sky fell down in the ocean O best among the Rākṣasas. Since then frightened as I am I live here in this place with no possibility of fear and quite safe. (21) Since then I always think of Rāma and I have been terrified and allergic to the things like Rāja (state affairs), Ratna (gems) Ramaṇī (beautiful woman) Ratha (chariot) etc., initiating with letter Ra, as the very Ra reminds me of Rāma. Whenever this letter falls into my ears I am frightened. (22) "Rāma might have come here" with this fear I have abandoned all my field activities. When I go to bed overpowered by sleep I always mentally remember Rāma. (23) Even when I wake up from sleep, I cannot forget Rāma. Therefore Rāvaṇa do not be obstinate towards Rāma and go home. (24) Save the old Rākṣasa dynasty (or else) by remembering him everything is destroyed. What I am telling you about Rāma, the supreme soul, is for your good. Hold it fast. (25) Give up your animosity. Adore him with devotion. Rāma is extremely merciful. I have heard the Munis saying that in the Satayuga the supreme God was requested by Brahmā. Hari enquired of him what he desired and assured him to fulfil it. Brahmā said—"O lotus eyed one, go to the earth in a human guise. Be the son of Daśaratha and kill the ten headed enemy Rāvaṇa soon. (26-27) Thus Rāma is not a human being he is the immutable Nārāyaṇa in person and has come to the forest in his illusory human guise. (So) he is extremely fearless. (28) He has come to remove the burden of earth. Therefore go home my dear and rejoice" Having heard what Mārīca said Rāvaṇa replied—(29)

"If Rāma is Paramātmā and has taken pains to come here in the human guise in order to kill me as requested by Brahmā, he will do it without any delay as his mental projections are to prove true (Satyasaṁkalpa) as he is the over lord. Therefore I will make every effort and will abduct Sītā from him. (30-31) O brave!

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे अरण्यकाण्डे षष्ठः सर्गः ॥ ६ ॥

If I am killed in the battle, I will obtain supreme abode otherwise killing Rāma in the battle I will obtain Sītā and be fearless. (32) Therefore get up O blessed one. Have the form of a strange deer and take Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa far from their Āśrama. (33) Then go quickly to your place and live there comfortably as usual. If you speak anything hereafter to intimidate me I will right now kill you with this sword. There is no doubt. Mārīca on his part hearing Rāvaṇa so saying, thought in his mind—(34-35) If I am killed by Rāma I will certainly get liberated from the ocean of worldly existence and if this rascal kills I will decidedly go to hell. (36) Having so decided to die at the hands of Rāma he got up quickly and said to Rāvaṇa—"I will obey your orders my lord". (37) Having so said he went to the hermitage of Rāma in Rāvaṇa's chariot. He became a deer of pure golden hue with white spots like silver. (38) His horns were made of gems and hooves of ruby's. His eyes were of sapphire flashing like lightning and mouth extremely charming he moved in the forest around the Āśrama of Śrī Rāma frequently presenting him within the range of Sītā's view. (39-40) Running one moment, stopping another moment, coming near Sītā and then running away terrified. This way the wicked Mārīca in the guise of an illusory deer, enchanting

Sītā, moved here and there. (41)

Thus ends canto VI of Aranyakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—On the other side Rāma also knowing the plan of Rāvaṇa said to Sītā in solitude—"Jānakī, listen to me. Rāvaṇa will come to you in the garb of a monk. You place in the hut a shadow of yours exactly of your shape and size and enter invisibly into the fire and stay there for a year under my instructions. After Rāvaṇa is made short work of, you will again obtain me O, auspicious one." (1-3) Having heard Śrī Rāma she did that. Putting the illusory Sītā outside she herself disappeared into the fire. (4) That illusory Sītā then took notice of that illusory deer. She came to Rāma with a smiling face and said humbly. (5) Rāma, see that strange deer made of gold and bedecked with gems, having lovely spots, feeling no fear from any side. Tie it and give it to me. Let this beautiful deer be (a means) for my play. (6)

"Be it so" he said to her, took his bow and while going spoke to Lakṣmaṇa—"Protect with every effort Sītā, my spouse

dear to me like my life. (7) There are in this forest the Rākṣasas dreadful in looking and expert in conjuring. Therefore be vigilant and protect the pious and unblemished Sītā. (8) Lakṣmaṇa said to Rāma—"Deva, it is Mārīca in the guise of deer. There is no doubt about it. Such type of deer is an impossibility." (9)

Śrī Rāma said—"If it is Mārīca I will undoubtedly kill him. If deer, I will bring it for the entertainment of Sītā. (10) I will go and tying the deer, will come back soon. You stay here fully prepared for the protection of Sītā and be alert." (11) So saying Rāma ran after the illusory deer—that Rāma who is the prop and support of Māyā which is so alluring and which appears in the form of universe. (12) That Rāma who is immutable, the conscious soul, the very perfect, chased that illusory deer. To prove the truth of the statement that Lord is compassionate towards his devotees. Even though knowing the reality he went after the deer in order to do favour to Sītā. Otherwise what had the Paramātmā who has no desire unaccomplished, to do with that deer or the wife? Mārīca on his part sometimes appeared very close and the very next moment ran and disappeared. (13-15) Close and far, he took Rāma very far. Then Rāma knew clearly that it was a Rākṣasa. (16) Taking an arrow he shot the Rākṣasa in the form of a deer. Mārīca fell down in his original form, his mouth full of blood. (17) "Oh! I am killed. Oh, Lakṣmaṇa of mighty arms, save me at once" saying so in a voice resembling to Rāma Mārīca the drinker of blood fell down. (18) By remembering whose name at the time of death even an ignorant person becomes equal to him. What to talk of Mārīca, who was killed by the same Rāma while looking at him? (19)

While being observed by the whole world a lustre arose from his body and entered into Rāma. Gods were highly amazed. (20) (There seems to be no coherence.) What action he did and what result this sinner and killer of Munis obtained! Or else it is simply the glory of Śrī Rāma no doubt. (21) Shot by Rāma with his arrow (earlier) he was so terrified that forgetting his house, wealth etc., he repeatedly remembered Rāma only. (22) By remembering Rāma always all his sins were washed away. Looking at Rāma he was killed by him. So he attained Rāma. (23) A Brāhmaṇa or Rākṣasa; a sinner or a religious whosoever he may be at the time of death if he remembers Rāma, he attains the supreme goal. (24) This way talking to each other the gods went to heaven. And then Rāma thought why that mean Rākṣasa while dying cried "Hā Lakṣmaṇa" imitating my voice and died? In what state Sītā would be after hearing this utterance as if spoken by me. (25-26)

So anxious and worried Rāma turned back from that distant place. (This side) Sītā after hearing the words of the wicked Mārīca shuddered with fear and worried and sad, spoke to Lakṣmaṇa as—"Lakṣmaṇa, hurry up and go. Your brother is tormented by the Rākṣasa. (27-28) Did you not hear your brother's cry "Hā Lakṣmaṇa?" Lakṣmaṇa said to her—"Devi, it must not be the utterance of Rāma. Some Rākṣasa must have uttered those words at the time of his death. How could Rāma adorable to the gods who could annihilate the three worlds within a moment if angered, can utter such pitiful words? Sītā very much angry looked at Lakṣmaṇa with tearful eyes. (29-31) (Sītā) said to Lakṣmaṇa—"O, wicked minded Lakṣmaṇa you wish calamity to befall your brother. You must have been sent by Bharata with a desire for destruction of Rāma. (32) You have decidedly come here to have me after Rāma dies. But you cannot have me. Look I am giving up my life today. (33) Rāma does not know that you are of this type and prepared to capture his wife. (Know) I will touch no body other than Rāma—You or Bharata. (34) Saying so she beat her breast and wept. Hearing it Lakṣmaṇa closed his ears and became extremely sad. (35) "(He said) you are calling me that, O Caṇḍī. Fie on you. You will get destroyed" saying so he gave Sītā in the charge of Vanadevīs and extremely pained as he was slowly proceeded towards Rāma. (36) Finding the interval, Rāvaṇa in the guise of a monk came to Sītā with his staff and Kamaṇḍalu (a water jar). (37) Sītā saw him and bade her Praṇāma at once and adorned him with devotion. (38) She offered beetroot and fruits and entertained him and said—"O Muni, please enjoy these fruits and take rest comfortably. (39) By the time my husband will come and he may render more service So stay if you please. (40)

The monk said— Who are you O lotus-eyed lady, and who is your husband, O sinless one? For what purpose are you living in this forest abounded by the Rākṣasas? Tell me then I will tell about myself. (41)

Sītā said— There was the great king Daśaratha the lord of Ayodhya. His eldest son is Rāma marked with all auspicious characteristics. (42) I am his wedded wife, Sītā the daughter of Janaka. His younger brother Lakṣmaṇa a devotee of his elder brother. Obeying the fatherly command we have come to live in Dandaka for fourteen years. Now I wish to know about you. Kindly speak. (43-44)

Pulastya, Rāvaṇa the king of Rākṣasas. I am suffering from the paroxysm of your love and have come to take you to my capital. (45) What will you do of Rāma in the garb of ascetic? Serve me. Enjoy all sorts of luxury with me. Leave the hard life of the forest. (46) Hearing that word slightly frightened Sītā said to him—if you say so to me you will be destroyed by Rāma. (47) Rāma also alongwith his younger brother will shortly come. Wait for a moment. Who is there to molest me as a rabbit cannot touch the lioness. (48) Torn away by the Rāma's arrows you will fall on the ground. After hearing Sītā's words Rāvaṇa became mad with anger and showed his original form as a big mountain, having ten mouths, twenty arms and the hue of the body was like black clouds. (49-50) Seeing that Vanadevīs (goddesses of the forest) and wild beings—all were horrified. Rāvaṇa digging up the earth with his nails and lifting it with his arms throwing it into the chariot quickly flew away through the sky. Sītā crying Hā Rāma! Hā Lakṣmaṇa!! (51-52) Horrified and mentally perturbed, pitiful, looking towards the ground (she went on crying). Hearing the pitiful cries of Sītā sharp beaked Jaṭāyu the best among the birds got up from the peak of the mountain. He said—"Stop, stop. Who is stealing in my face the wife of the Lord of the worlds from the unguarded hutment in the forest as if a dog takes away Purodāśa sanctified

After saying so with his sharp beaks broke the chariot into pieces, tore away the horses with his claws and broke his bow also. (56) Thereafter leaving Sītā Rāvaṇa took sword and incited with anger he cut the wings of the wise king of birds. (57) Jaṭāyu the king of birds fell on the ground half dead. Then Rāvaṇa taking Sītā on another chariot (went) (58) Sītā finding no other protector cried Rāma, Rāma. Hā Rāma! O lord of the world, you are not looking at me who am most miserable. (59) O Rāghava, get your wife released from the Rākṣasa carrying her away. O Blessed Lakṣmaṇa protect me, the guilty one. (60) O Dewara (the younger brother of husband) you behave to excuse me. You were struck by me with the arrow of harsh words." Rāvaṇa apprehensive of Rāma's arrival, fled like wind abducting Sītā who was crying. Sītā while being carried looked downwards. (61-62) She happened to see five monkeys sitting on the peak of a mountain and that lotus faced one took off her ornaments bundled them in the half of her upper garment, dropped them on the mountain with the idea that they may tell the story to Rāma. Then crossing the ocean and reaching Lanka he kept her in the Ashoka garden situated in a lonely corner in his gynaeceum. He got her surrounded by the ogre ladies and guarded her with motherly care. (63—65)

Sītā was thinned, her face looked pitiful. She abandoned all sorts of adornment. Her face was dry due to her inner torture. She was quite perturbed. Always weeping and muttering Rāma, Rāma, Sītā lived amongst the ogresses. (66)

Bewailing of Rāma in separation of Sītā and meeting with Jaṭāyu

Śrī Mahādeva said—The Lord Rāma when after killing the conjuring ogre, capable of assuming any form he wished, started for his hermitage he saw from a considerable distance Lakṣmaṇa coming with a pitiful face and dry mouth. The wisest of the wise, Rāma started thinking himself. (1-2) Lakṣmaṇa knows nothing about the illusory Sītā created by me. I do know the fact yet keeping him in dark I will bewail like an ordinary person. (3) If I keep silent being detached and stay in my Āśrama then how will the crores of ogres be killed. (4) If I grieve for her like a miserable and lustful worldly man then searching Śītā gradually I may reach the abode of Rākṣasas. And I will kill Rāvaṇa alongwith the entire ogre race. Taking Sītā back who was deposited in the fire by me I will go back to Ayodhyā without any delay. I implored by Brahmā, have manifested myself in the human form. (5-6) So just like an ordinary man I will stay for some time on the earth. And hearing and contemplating the pastimes of mine, in the form of an illusory man, my devotees will get liberation without any effort. Having so decided and seeing Lakṣmaṇa, he spoke then. (7-8) Why have you come leaving my beloved Sītā, the daughter of Janak? She could have been abducted or devoured by some Rākṣasas. (9) Lakṣmaṇa with his folded hands reproduced the harsh words of Sītā in a voice choked with tears. She heard, " Hā Lakṣmaṇa" uttered by the Rākṣasa. (10) Hearing the voice perfectly resembling to yours, she ordered me—"go, hurry up". I told her while she was weeping that it was the voice of the Rākṣasa and not of Rāma and requested her, one having a pious smile, to be normal. (10) Having been so consoled by me the chaste lady again told me what I cannot repeat before you. (12) Corking my ears I came out to look for you. Rāma said to Lakṣmaṇa—"still you have done wrong. (13) You following the instruction of a woman left Sītā, of a beautiful face, alone. Undoubtedly she has either been abducted or devoured by the ogres". (14) In this way the worried Rāma hastily went to his hermitage.

There not finding Sītā he became extremely sad and wailed. (15)
 "O darling where have you gone? You are not in the hermitage as usual. Or else you have hidden yourself somewhere playfully in order to tease me. (16) This way he combed the entire forest but could not see Jānakī (Then he was speaking incoherently)
 "O goddesses of the forest where is Sītā, my beloved wife, tell me." (17) "O animals, birds and trees show me my wife." Uttering so, Rāma found Sītā no where. (18) Even though he was omniscient perfectly yet He could not know the (reality); even though bliss embodied yet grieved; though immobile yet ran here and there. (19) Even though he is beyond mine and mineness, beyond ego, the bliss solidified and unbreakable, He cried; beatitude yet he wept and due to the extreme sorrow He said O my wife, O my Sītā. (20) In this way submitting to his own Māyā, the best among the Raghus appears to the ignorant as if quite attached, but not so to the wise. (21)

This way Rāma alongwith Lakṣmaṇa combing the entire forest (came to a point where) a chariot, royal umbrella, the bow, and a wooden part of the chariot, were scattered broken on the ground. (22) Seeing that Rāma said to Lakṣmaṇa—"Look Lakṣmaṇa, somebody was taking Jānakī with him. Somebody else attacked and defeated him and took Sītā away. (23) Thereafter they covered a little more distance and saw a mountainous body besmeared with blood and Rāma said to

Lakṣmaṇa. (24) This is it. This ogre eating away the beautiful Sītā is sleeping in this secluded place quite satisfied. See I am just killing this Rākṣasa. (25) Quick, get my bow and arrow O delighter of Raghus. Hearing those words of Rāma Jaṭāyu said in a frightened tone. (26) "God bless you. Do'nt kill me. I am already dying on account of my own deed. I am Jaṭāyu. I chased Rāvaṇa the abductor of your wife. (27) There was a fight, O vanquisher of the foes. I killed his horses broke his chariot and bow. After that I was deadly wounded by him. (28) I am fallen. O Lord of the world. I am about to die. Look at me. (29) Having so heard Rāma looked at the poor fellow on the verge of death. Rāma, his eyes full of tears of sorrow caressed him with his hand. (30) (Rāma said) O Jaṭāyu, tell me who kidnapped my wife of a beautiful face? Since you have been killed for my sake so you are my relative. (31) Jaṭāyu vomiting blood from his mouth said in faltering voice. O Rāma the ogre named Rāvaṇa of tremendous valour, taking Sītā, went southward. I cannot say any more. No strength is left. I am dying before you. (33) It is my great fortune O sinless one that I have seen you while breathing my last. You are Paramātmā, Viṣṇu in the form of an illusory man. among the Raghus. Touch me please with your hands and then I will go to your abode. (35) "Be it so" and Rāma touched his body with his hand smilingly. And then Jaṭāyu died and fell on the ground. (36) Rāma grieved for him as if he was his near relative. His eyes had tears. Lakṣmaṇa brought wood and Rāma cremated him. (37) Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa bathed with heavy heart. He killed deers in the forest and scattered several pieces of flesh here and there in the green verdure of the forest. Let all the birds enjoy it and Jaṭāyu be fully satisfied. He mounted on airchariot which was resplendent like sun. He was holding conch, disc, mace, and lotus in his hands, a diadem on his head, fully ornamented, selfluminous, having yellow garment, taintless. (54) He who listens single mindedly this prayer, writes or recites gets my own form and at the time of death he does not fail to remember me. (55) The bird Jaṭāyu heard this statement of Śrī Rāma with great joy, assumed his form and went to the place which is adored by even Brahmā. (56)

Śrī Mahādeva said—Thereafter a sorrowful Rāma accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa went to another forest while searching for Sītā. (1) There he saw a Rākṣasa of strange shape whose chest had a big mouth in it and who was without eyes etc. (2) His arms extended for a Yojana. The Rākṣasa, the king among the Daityas and a killer of all creatures, was named Kabandha. (3) Within the range of his two arms Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were on their travel. They saw that big creature while they were fenced by his two arms. (4) Rāma smiled and said to Lakṣmaṇa—“Lakṣmaṇa look at the Rākṣasa. He is without head and legs and his mouth is in his breast. (5) He lives on eating whatever he gets with his arms. We two are decidedly fenced within the range of his arms. (6) There seems no way to escape O, delighter of Raghus. What should we do now? He may devour both of us. (7) Lakṣmaṇa said this much to him—There is no sense in discussion O Rāghava! we both should unworriedly cut his two

(9) Then the Daitya quite amazed (asked)—who are you two the bulls among gods as there is nobody in the world, heaven or among gods who could cut my arms. (10) Then Rāma, the lotus eyed one, smilingly spoke—(there has been) a great king Daśaratha, the ruler of Ayodhya. (11) I am Rāma his son and this is my brother, the wise Lakṣmaṇa. Now searching for her we happened to come to this dense forest. (13) We were within the hold of your arms. To protect our life we cut your arms. Now who are you with such a frightening figure?" (14)

Kabandha said—"Rāma, blessed I am, as you have come to me. In my previous life I was Gandharva-king, proud of my beauty and youth. (for my redemption) Aṣṭāvakra who was resplendent due to his austere penances said to me how that curse would come to an end. (18) "In the Treta age Nārāyaṇa himself appearing as son of Daśaratha will come and cut your arms of one Yojana length each. (19) After this you will be free from the curse and assume your usual form." This way being cursed I noticed that my body was transformed into that of a Rākṣasa. (20) Once I attacked Indra with anger. He also struck me with his bolt on my head. (21) With the result my head and legs entered into my stomach but due to the boon from Brahmā I did not die even after I was hit by the bolt. (22) Seeing me without mouth all (gods) felt pity on me and said to Indra—"Without mouth how will he live?" (23) Then Indra said to me—"Be your mouth in your stomach and be your arms one Yojana long. Now go from here." (24) Having been so said I live here and everyday (catching hold of) wild animals with my arms I eat them. Now you have cut my arms O sinless one. (25) Now you throw me in a ditch full of fire and fuel. Being burnt by you with fire O the best of Raghu dynasty, I will assume my previous form and then I will tell you the way to find out your wife. "After he said so Lakṣmaṇa immediately dug a big pit and threw him in that and burnt him with fuel

Gandharva said—"Hey Rāma, you are endless, eternal and beyond the ken of mind or speech. Now my heart is eager to offer praise to you. This urge is very strong. (30) Your real form e.g., the knowledge solidified, is even different from your bodies—gross and subtle (Virāt and Hiranyagarbha). It is beyond perception of even Yogīs. Whatever is there apart from you, is insentient, visible and non-soul. Therefore insentient mind of mine which is different from you, cannot know you. The fallacious identification of intellect and soul is called Jīva and it is Brahma only who witnesses intellect etc. It is not a subject of sense perception like that of mind and speech etc. This entire mobile and immobile world is superimposed due to wrong notion on that immutable and the over soul of all. Hey Rāma, your subtle body is known as Hiranyagarbha and the gross one is as Virāt. (31—33) It is your subtle form which is a matter of only realization, which is benedictory for meditators and in which the entire universe—past, present and future appear. (34) Your cosmic body (gross) is covered by the seven coverings of Mahat etc., which is ten fold to its previous evolute. In this cosmic body of yours is situated your Virāt form which is the subject of meditation by Yogīs. (35)

If a striver fixes his mind steadfast in this gross body of yours, he is easily liberated. Hey Rāma, there is nothing else outside and different from this gross body of yours. (46) Therefore, hey Rāma, I always meditate on your that gross body which creates a horripilation in the body and love wells up in the heart. (47) Hey Rāma, when this Jīva meditates on your Virāt form he is liberated instantly yet I do not like it. I will fix my mind on this human guise of yours. (48) O delighter of Raghus, (I would like to) have in my mind this form of cloudy hue, holding bow and arrow, bedecked with matted locks and bark garment, searching for Sītā, accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa. The omniscient Śaṅkara and Pārvatī always think of this form of yours and then initiate with the Tāraka Mantra of Rāma-Rāma which is denoter of Brahma to those on the verge of death in Kashi, and he (Śaṅkara) remains always contented. Therefore, O lord of Jānakī you are decidedly Paramātmā. (49—52) The people deluded by your Māyā do not know your real nature and form. O creator of the world, I pay my obeisance to you. (53) O Lord of Ayodhya attended by Lakṣmaṇa, my Praṇāma to you. O lord of the world, save me. Your Māyā may not envelop me. (54)

Āśrama of Śabarī (4) Observing Śrī Rāma alongwith Lakṣmaṇa, coming quite close Śabarī extremely happy got up swiftly. Her eyes were full of joyful tears and she prostrated herself at the feet of the Lord. She welcomed them and after asking a few questions salutary of nature, got them seated on a beautiful mat. (5-6) She washed the feet of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa with great devotion. With that water she sprinkled her body and adored them by offering ablution etc. (7) Delightfully she offered to Rāma with love the fruits, sweet like nectar and which she purposely collected for him. She adored the feet with fragrant flowers and sandal paste. (8-9)

After entertaining them when Rāma alongwith Lakṣmaṇa was comfortably seated, Śabarī with devotion and folding her hands spoke—(10) "O best among the Raghus, formerly my Guru Mahārṣi (Mataṅga) lived here in this Āśrama. I used to attend to him and lived here for thousands of years. Now he attained the Brahmaloka. While going he instructed me to live here with undistracted mind. (12) The eternal god has manifested as Rāma, the son of Daśaratha, for annihilating the Rākṣasas and protecting the Ṛṣis. (13) He will come. Fixing your mind on him be here. At present he is living in his Āśrama on Chitrakuta mountain. (14) Protect your body till he comes. Only after Seeing Rāma you will burn your body and go to his abode. (15) Since then, Hey Rāma, I was waiting for your arrival and constantly meditating on you as instructed by my Guru. Today the forecast of my Guru has become fruitful. (16) Hey Rāma even my Guru could not have your Darśana. On the contrary, I, one beyond the ken of knowledge, I, a woman born in a lowly caste, so ignorant by nature (am blessed with your vision). (17) I do not deserve to be a maid of hundreds of generations of your devotees one after the other. There is nothing to talk of being a servant directly of yours. manifestation of god is the fifth. The sixth one is having a pious nature observing the Yamas and Niyamas and love for my Pūjā. The seventh is the Pūjā of my Mantra with all prescribed procedure. (24-25) The adoration of my devotees more than my own, taking every creature to be my manifestation, dispassion from the worldly objects and being equipped with Śama is the eighth means of my devotion. The ninth one is O good lady the discussion about my real form and nature. This is ninefold way of devotion. Whosoever adopts these means—whether a female or male, or one belonging to sub-human species cultivates Premā Bhakti O auspicious lady. (26—28) With the advent of this devotion the devotee has direct experience of my reality and consequently he or she or it gets instant liberation in the same life. (29) Therefore it is certain that Bhakti leads to Mokṣa. One who acquires the first means of the nine, gradually inculcates all the rest. Therefore devotion itself is liberation. It is a decided fact. Since you have inculcated my devotion, so I have personally come to you. (30-31) Hereafter because of having direct vision of mine you are liberated there is no doubt. Now if you know, tell me where the lotus-eyed Sītā is. (32) Where is She? Who has abducted my good looking beloved? (33) cause of the universe, you know everything yet you are asking me following the norms of human world. (34) So I will tell you where Sītā is at present. Sītā kidnapped by Rāvaṇa is now in Lanka. (35) Not very far from here there is a lake. Pampā by name. Close to it there is a great mountain named Rishyamuka. (36) There the Vānara king Sugrīva of matchless valour lives alongwith his four ministers always terrified from Vālī, his brother. That mountain is inaccessible to Vālī due to the curse of a Ṛṣi. Go there and befriend Sugrīva, O lord. He will do all your jobs. Right before you, O delight of Raghus, I will enter the fire. (37—39) O the emperor of emperors, O lord, wait for a moment till burning my body I go to your supreme abode of Viṣṇu. (40) Thus having talked to Rāma she entered the fire and within a moment destroying all bonds of Avidyā (ignorance) due to the grace of Śrī Rāma Śabarī got the salvation which is very difficult to attain. (41) What remains difficult to attain, when Śrī Rāma, the lord of the universe, compassionate to his devotees is pleased? So even Śabarī of a lowly birth got salvation. (42) And then what is to talk of the great Brāhmaṇas, virtuous and always immersed in meditating on Lord Rāma? (There is no wonder) if such Brāhmaṇas attain salvation as his devotion itself is Mokṣa, no doubt. (43)

Śrī Mahādeva said—Thereafter Rāma alongwith Lakṣmaṇa slowly and gently went to the banks of Pampā lake and was quite amazed to see that beautiful lake. (1) It was expanded approximately upto two miles, full of clean water and unfathomable, beautified with the blossoming lotus, Kahlāra, Kumuda and Utpala flowers. trees and the beauty of the mountain, were passing on by the side of Rishyamuka mountain. Then Sugrīva sitting at the peak of the mountain saw them passing. Seeing them going that way Sugrīva climbed up on the loftiest peak of the mountain. (6-7) Terrified as he was he said to Hanumān—"Who are the two brave persons, my friend?" Go in the guise of a Brāhmaṇa student and find out. May God bless you. Whether they are deputed by Vāli and have come to kill me. Talk to them and find what is there in their heart. If they have mala fide intention, signal me with your fingers. You be quite humble and know their purpose for certain. (8—10)

So, in the guise of a Brahmacārī Hanumān came to them, quite humbly he saluted Rāma and said so. (11) "Who are you two, O tiger among men, quite young and bravely in appearance, illumining all quarters with your resplendence like two suns? (12) It appears in my mind that you two are the creators of the three worlds or else you are the Pradhāna and Puruṣa (of the Sāṅkhya), the primal cause of the universe and pervading it through. (13) Through your Māyā you have assumed human guise and moving around sportively in order to remove the burden of the earth and protect your devotees you are incarnated. Even though you are Parabrahma, yet you are moving in the guise of Kṣatriyas. You, as your sport, always create, sustain and destroy the universe. (14-15) You are quite independent,

Śrī Rāma said to Lakṣmaṇa—"See this fellow in the form of a Brahmacārī. He decidedly must have studied grammar thoroughly and many times. (17) He spoke so much but committed no grammatical mistake. Then Rāghava, the embodiment of knowledge, said to Hanumān. (18) "I am Rāma, the son of Daśaratha and this is my younger brother Lakṣmaṇa. I with my wife Sītā came to the forest respecting the orders of my father. I am living in Dandaka forest, O Brāhmaṇa. There some Rākṣasa abducted my wife Sītā and I have come here while making a search for her. Now you just tell me who and whose son you are." (19-20)

The Vaṭu said—"The King Sugrīva of Vānaras, a wise one, is living on this mountain alongwith his four ministers. (21) Sugrīva is the younger brother of wicked Vāli. Śrī Rāma said— I also have come to befriend him O lord of the monkeys. I will undoubtedly perform the task of my friend if any. (26) Hanumān now appeared in his real form and said to Rāma—"Take your seats on my shoulders and we will go on mountain where Sugrīva lives alongwith his ministers terrified from Vāli. Giving his approval Rāma mounted on his shoulder and so did Lakṣmaṇa. (27-28) The great monkey sprang up and reached the top of the mountain within no time. There Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa stayed under the shade of a tree. (29) Hanumān went to Sugrīva and submitted with folded hands—"Let your fear disappear. Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa have come, O king. (30) Get up at once. I have negotiated your friendship with Rāma. Make the fire a witness and before it get yourself befriended, Quick. (31) Then Sugrīva with great pleasure came to Śrī Rāma, the best among the Raghus. He himself cut a branch of tree and happily gave it to Rāma for his seat. (32) Hanumān proffered seat to Lakṣmaṇa and Lakṣmaṇa to Sugrīva. Then all of them sat there with great pleasure. (33) Lakṣmaṇa narrated everything what happened to Rāma right from the beginning—their journey to the forest and abduction of Sītā. (34)

Having heard what Lakṣmaṇa said Sugrīva spoke to Rāma—
 "O the greatest among the kings, I will arrange the thorough search for Sītā." (35) I will be helpful to you, the killer of your foes. Listen to me O Rāma, I will tell you what I once saw. (36) One day I was sitting with my ministers on the top of the mountain. Somebody was taking some lady of a superior rank through the sky. (37) She was screaming Rāma! Rāma!! When she saw us on the mountain she took off some of her ornaments and in a piece of her skirt dropped while looking below. And that Rākṣasa took her away while she went on crying. I on my part took those ornaments and put them in the cave O lord. (38-39) You may have a look instantly over them and see if they are yours or not. Having so said the monkey king brought them and showed to Rāma. (40) He untied the bundle. Took the ornaments to his bosom and started crying Sītā, Sītā like an ordinary person. (41) Lakṣmaṇa consoled him and said—O Rāma, you will get the auspicious Jānakī very shortly after killing Rāvaṇa in the battle with the help of the monkey king. (42)

Sugrīva also said—"O Rāma, I make a solemn promise to you. I will get you Jānakī by killing Rāvaṇa in the battle." (43) Then Hanumān kindled fire near them and the two, Rāma and Sugrīva, while fire-god was the witness, stretched their arms and embraced each other completely free from any guile. Close to Raghunātha Sugrīva took his seat. (44-45) Thereafter Sugrīva narrated his story to Rāma with great affection. He said "O friend, now listen to my story what Vāli did to me. (46) The son of Maya named Māyāvī extremely intoxicated with his might came to Kishkindha and challenged Vāli with a great lion like roar. Vāli could not bear it, went out, his face reddened with anger and gave him the strongest possible blow with his fist. (47-48) Getting nervous he ran away to his cave and Vāli chased that Māyāvī and so did I. (49) Having seen Māyāvī entering his cave furious Vāli said to me—"Stay you outside. I am going into the cave." Having so said he entered the cave and did not come out for a full month. (50) After a month blood profusely oozed through the mouth of the cave. I was greatly pained to see it and presuming that Vāli has been killed, I was much grieved and my body was as if burning. (51) I put a big rock on the opening of the cave, came back to the home and reported that Vāli was dead struck by the Rākṣasa. (52) Having heard this everybody became sad and even though I was reluctant all the monkey ministers consecrated me on the throne. (53) Then I ruled the kingdom for sometime O subduer of the enemy. Then Vāli turned up and angrily spoke to me in harsh words. (54) Scolding me like anything he struck me with his punches of the fist. Then I left the city and ran away with extreme fear. (55) I was on the run throughout the world and then I took shelter on Rishyamuka as he, for the fear of the curse from the Rṣi does not come to this mountain O lord. (56) Since then that fat headed fool has been enjoying my wife. So, I am miserable, smarting from great sorrow, my wife usurped and I am without any shelter. So I live here. Today after touching your feet I felt somewhat comforted. The lotus eyed Rāma was smarting under the sorrow of his friend. (57-58) (Rāma assured) I will kill your enemy, the kidnapper of your wife. He took this vow before Sugrīva. (59)

Sugrīva too said—"O, the best among the kings, Vāli is the mightiest among the mighty, not easy to overcome by gods even. How will you kill him? (60) O the supreme among the mighty listen. I am telling you about his might. Once a hideous and extremely mighty Rākṣasa Dundubhi by name, came to Kishkindha O Rāma, in the guise of a great bull buffalow. He, the dreadful one, challenged Vāli in the night for a duel. (61-62) Having heard that Vāli could not tolerate it and extremely angry he caught him by the horns and knocked him down. (63) Pressing his body with one of his feet, twisting his big head broke it and threw it away on the ground. (64)

That head fell at a distance of one Yojana near the Āśrama of Mātāṅga Rṣi which caused the shower of blood in the Āśrama premises. Seeing that the extremely angry Mātāṅga said to Vāli if you hereafter come to my mountain, your head will be broken and you will die there is no doubt. Having been so cursed he does not come to Rishyamuka since then. (65—67) I know this and so I live here quite fearlessly. O Rāma, look at the head of Dundubhi, big like mountain. (68) If you are capable of throwing this head, then only your strength to kill Vāli will be proved. So saying he showed that mountain like head. (69) Seeing this Rāma smiled a bit and with the big toe of his foot threw it at a distance of ten Yojanas. It was something unimaginable. (70) Well done, well done said Sugrīva and his ministers. Then again Sugrīva said to Rāma—the lover of his devotees. Look O the best among the Raghus, these are seven very strong fig trees. Vāli shook them one by one till they became leafless. (71-72) If you drill holes through them with a single shot of arrow then I will believe that you will kill Vāli. Rāma agreed, took his bow and put an arrow on it. (73) Then the mightiest Rāma shot through those seven fig trees. The arrow piercing through the seven figs, the mountain as well as the earth again came back and stayed in the quiver of Rāma as usual. The amazed Sugrīva, overjoyed as he was, spoke to Rāma. (75)

"O lord, you are the lord of the universe, Paramātmā Himself no doubt. Due to my virtuous acts in my past lives today I happen to have your company. (76) The exalted souls adore you in order to get released from the Samsāra. Now how could I beseech you for the worldly gains when I am opportuned to get you the giver of the Mokṣa? (77) Wives, sons, wealth, kingdom everything are the creations of your Māyā. Therefore O god of gods, I desire nothing else. Be propitiated to me. (78) It is due to my great luck that today I have attained you the very embodiment of beatific joy just as somebody digs the earth for the sake of mud and happens to fall on a treasure, O lord. (79) O lord, today all my bondage, the product of beginningless Avidyā has been cut asunder. These bondages do not break even through the sacrifice, charity, penances, the actions like Iṣṭāpūrta etc., on the contrary it gets strengthened. O lord, that Samsāra instantly gets destroyed with the vision of your feet there is no doubt. (80-81) Whose mind becomes steady in your meditation even for half a moment his Ajñāna (ignorance) the root cause of all evils, perishes instantly. That mind of mine, O Rāma, be centred in you and deviate not to any other place. (82-83) One who chants in a sweet tune 'Rāma, Rāma' through his speech, he gets freed from all sins even if he is a Brāhmaṇa killer or a drunkard. (84) I do not covet victory or conjugal pleasures, O Rāma. I cherish the desire only for your devotion which cuts asunder all sorts of bondages. (85) O best among the Raghus, the universe is the creation of your Māyā and I am a fraction of yours. Granting me the devotion to your feet, save me from the Samśāra, a great calamity. (86) Formerly when my mind was enveloped by your Māyā I had friends, foes and neutrals. But today O Rāghava, after the vision of your feet everything looks like Brahma to me. No friends or enemies to me any more. Till the Jīva is tied due to your Māyā there remains the influence of Guṇas like Sattva etc. (87-88) The diversity exists till (the Jīva is under the sway of) your Māyā; not otherwise. As long as the sense of diversity is there due to ignorance; the fear from Kāla (the time or death) is bound to subsist. (89) Therefore one who indulges with Avidyā (the ignorance) he sinks in the blinding darkness. The bondage of (Samśāra) in the form of affinity with the son and wife etc., is rooted in Māyā. O best among the Raghus, remove this Māyā which is only your maid servant. (90) O Lord, let my thought waves (Citta Vṛtti) be concentrated around your lotus feet; my speech be engaged in chanting your name and narrating your Kathās; my hands be always busy in the services of your devotees and my physical body be always in the company of

Thus ends canto I of Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Killing of Vāli and a dialogue with him

Śrī Mahādeva said—This way smilingly looking at Sugrīva all whose sins were washed away due to the divine association, the lord Rāma took Sugrīva under the sway of his deluding Māyā in order to get his object fulfilled, spoke—"Friend, whatever you say is undoubtedly true." (1-2) But the people will question about it me as—"What did Rāma do for his friend, the monkey king, even though he made him friend in the witness of fire-god." (3) This type of obloquy I will be subjected to, there is no doubt. Therefore do you challenge Vāli for combat. Go. May god bless you. (4) I will kill him with a single arrow and get you enthroned. Agreeing to (what Rāma said) Sugrīva swiftly went to Kishkindha garden. (5) He roared and challenged Vāli. Hearing the sound of his brother, Vāli, his eyes reddened with anger immediately left his abode for where Sugrīva was. Sugrīva saw him coming and gave a blow on his chest quickly. (6-7) The extremely angry Vāli struck Sugrīva with both his fists. Sugrīva also counter attacked. This way the two angrily fought with each other. To see them resembling with each other Rāma was non-plussed. He did not shoot the arrow lest he might kill Sugrīva instead. (8-9) Sugrīva then ran away terrified and vomiting blood. Vāli went back to his abode and Sugrīva on the other hand spoke to Rāma. (10) Why are you causing me being killed at the hands of my brother, the bitter enemy of mine? If you want me killed, do kill me yourself. (11) Reassuring me first O truthful Rāma, the shelter to the refugees, why are you ignoring me? (12)

Having heard what Sugrīva said, Rāma with tearful eyes embraced Sugrīva and said—"Don't fear. Finding you two the replica of each other, I did not shoot the arrow lest I could kill my own friend. Just now I will put some distinguishing mark to avoid the confusion. (13-14) Go and again challenge him. You will see Vāli, your enemy, killed. I am Rāma. I swear by you O brother. I will kill the enemy within a moment. (15)

So reassuring Sugrīva, Rāma said to Lakṣmaṇa—"Put a garland of blossoming flowers in the neck of Sugrīva." (16) Then O Mahābhāga despatch Sugrīva to Vāli. Lakṣmaṇa did so and respectfully said "Go, go." (17) This way he sent Sugrīva. Sugrīva also going there did as instructed. Again he made a terrific roar and challenged Vāli. (18)

Having heard the roar, the amazed Vāli overpowered by anger, girded up his loin, was ready to go. (19) While Vāli was to start, Tārā held and forbade him. You should not go this time. I am having an apprehension in my mind. (20) Just now he had a crushing defeat from you and has come again so soon. Definitely he must have had a mighty helping hand (by now). (21) Vāli said to her—"O having beautiful eyebrow, have no fear on his accord. Darling, leave my hand and go. I am going to that enemy. I will kill him and come back soon. Who could be his helper? Even if there is any, I will kill them both in a second and come back. Don't grieve on that account. How can a brave warrior remain in the house even knowing that some enemy is challenging him? So I will come back after killing him O lovely one. (24)

Tārā said—Hearken from me something more, O Rājendra, and do as you think fit. Āṅgada, your son heard something

while he was on hunting errand. He told me that the Ayodhya King Śrī Rāma, the son of Daśaratha had come to Dandaka forest alongwith his brother Lakṣmaṇa and wife Sītā. There Sītā has been abducted by Rāvaṇa. So he alongwith his brother searching for Sītā, has come to Sugrīva on Rishyamuka mountain and Sugrīva made friendship with him in the witness of fire-god. (25—28) Rāma alongwith Lakṣmaṇa made a promise to Sugrīva—"Killing Vāli in battle I will make you king. (29) Having so decided both have come with him. Take my words for granted (think over) how could the recently defeated Sugrīva have come again so soon. (30) Therefore forget all enmity with Sugrīva and take him in, consecrate him as Prince Regent and take shelter of Śrī Rāma. (31) Save me and Aṅgada, the kingdom and the family O bull among the monkeys. Having so said Tārā, her face drenched with tears, fell down at his feet. (32) Holding his feet in her hands she wept quite shaken with fear. Then Vāli embracing her affectionately said this—(33)

You fear due to your feminine nature darling. There is no occasion for fear to me. If the lord Rāma has come alongwith Lakṣmaṇa, there will definitely be my friendship with him there is no doubt. Rāma is Nārāyaṇa in person, the over lord of all.

He has incarnated to remove the burden of earth. So I have heard before. To Him, the Paramātmā, there is nobody friend or foe as such. (34—36) Prostrating at his feet I will get him here to my house O gentle one. That lord of lords is attainable through devotion and he favours those who adore him. (37) If Sugrīva has come alone I will kill him in a moment and what you said about his coronation as heir apparent, how can I do it when I am being challenged by the enemy O darling! I am brave, admired by the whole world, O one having auspicious marks. (38-39) How can Vāli speak such thing as if he is frightened? Therefore give up worrying and stay in the house, O lovely one. (40) Having so consoled Tārā who was shedding tears and was very much sad, Vāli went determined to kill Sugrīva. (41) Having seen Vāli coming, the mighty valorous Sugrīva as if it was a tusker, with a garland of flower in his neck, sprang up. (42) He struck Vāli with his fists and so did Vāli to him. And they went on so punching each other with the fists—Sugrīva to Vāli and Vāli to Sugrīva. (43) Sugrīva was fighting and at the sametime looking at Rāma. The mighty Rāma on his part watching them so fighting took an arrow from his quiver and put on his bow that he received from Indra, pulled it unto his ear while he was hidden behind a tree. He took the aim of Vāli's chest and the mightiest Hari shot it that was like thunderbolt and having the utmost force. (44—46) That arrow shot through the chest of Vāli and he with a great uproarious sound fell down on the earth shaking it. (47) For a moment he remained unconscious. Then slowly he came to the senses and saw the lotus eyed Rāma before him. He was holding the bow in his left hand and arrow in the right. (48) He was wearing garment of barks and a crown of matted locks. His chest was broad and he was bedecked with wild garland. (49) His arms were large fleshy and good looking and his bodily hue was just like Dūrvā grass and he was attended by Sugrīva and Lakṣmaṇa on his sides. (50)

When Vāli saw Rāma, he said to him accusingly—"What wrong did I do O Rāma, to you for which you have killed me?" (51) Overlooking Rājadharmā (royal duties) you did a reproachable act while hiding yourself behind a tree, shot arrow on me. (52) What fame will you get O Rāma, by having fought like a thief. If you are a Kṣatriya prince born in a dynasty of Manu, you should have fought the battle face to face. And it is only then that you could get the result thereof. What did Sugrīva do which I did not? (53-54) Rāvaṇa abducted your wife in the great forest. For that you have solicited help from Sugrīva. So I have heard. (55) Decidedly you are unaware of my power O Rāma which is known to the entire universe. If I wish I can handcuff Rāvaṇa alongwith the ogre dynasty and bring here the entire Lanka including Sītā within half a Muhūrta, O Rāghava. You are said to be righteous in the world O Rāma. (56-57) What merit will you attain by killing me, a monkey, like a Vyādha (hunter)? Even the flesh of a monkey is not worth eating so what will you do by killing me." (58)

Then while Vāli was this way speaking much, Rāma said to him—"I am the protector of Dharma and moving around in the world with my bow." (59) I am maintaining Dharma by killing unrighteous ones. Daughter, sister, brother's wife and daughter-in-law all the four are equal. One who makes copulation with either of the four, the foolish and sinful he should be declared. And he deserves killing by the kings. (60-61) You forcefully cohabit with the wife of your younger brother. Therefore you have been killed by me, the knower of Dharma O monkey. (62) Because of being a monkey you do not know that the great men move around the world sanctifying it with their visits. So one should not boast before them. (63) Hearing that Vāli shaken with fear, knowing Rāma to be the Lord of Lakṣmī saluted him quickly and said. (64)

O Mahābhāga Rāma I now know that you are the supreme Lord. Unaware of the facts, whatever I said may please be forgiven by you. (65) O lord your direct vision is rare even to the great Yogīs. I am breathing last in your presence and particularly by the stroke of your arrow. (66) You are before me in person today when I am just to die. Whereas people who at the time of departure even helplessly utter only your name go to the supreme abode. (67) O Deva, I take you to be the primeval person and Jānakī to be auspicious Lakṣmī. Solicited by Brahmā you have appeared for killing Rāvaṇa. (68) Now permit me O Rāma to go to the supreme abode and be kind to my son Aṅgada who is equal to me in might. (69) O Rāma, touching my heart with your hands take out the arrow." "Be it so", Rāma said, removed the arrow and touched his heart with his hands. Instantly that monkey assumed the form of Indra. (70) Vāli was killed through the arrow of Rāma. (Secondly) he got the cool and soothing touch of his hands. So at once giving up his monkey form he attained that supreme abode which is unattainable by others—and which is most difficult even for the Paramahansa Yogīs. (71)

Thus ends canto II of Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—When Vāli was killed by the Paramātmā Rāma in the battle all the monkeys being afraid fled away to Kishkindha. (1) They said to Tārā—O great lady, Vāli has been killed in the battle. Now try to protect Aṅgada and alert the ministers. (2) We are going to defend the town by closing all the four gates. By the time you make Aṅgada the king of monkeys O beautiful lady. (3) Having heard Vāli dead Tārā was overgrieved and started beating again and again her head and breast with her hands. (4) What is the use of Aṅgada or kingdom or town or wealth to me?. Just now I am going to make Saṁ alongwith my husband. (5) Saying so Tārā overgrieved as she was, weeping with dishevelled hairs hurried to where the body of her husband lay. (6) Seeing Vāli fallen smeared with blood and dust she started crying "Nātha, Nātha" (Lord, O Lord) and fell at his feet. (7) While crying pitiably she saw Rāma and said, "O Rāma, kill me through the arrow by which you killed Vāli. (8) So that I should go to the abode of my husband. He must be waiting for me because he will not feel at home without me even in the heaven, O delighter of Raghus. (9) You have a first hand experience of the separation from wife O sinless one. So give me to Vāli and you will get the fruit of Patnīdāna. (10) Sugrīva, enjoy alongwith Rūmā without any fear of any enemy, the kingdom which you received from Rāma, the killer of Vāli. (11) The great souled Rāma compassionate to crying Tārā consoled her instructing in the knowledge of supreme truth. (12)

O timid lady, why do you unnecessarily grieve for your husband who is not to be grieved for. Tell me which really your husband is—this body or the Jīva. (13) This inert body an evolute of five gross elements, a bundle of skin, flesh, blood and bones a product of Kāla, Karma and Guṇa (time—spirit, destiny and modes of nature) is still lying before you. (14) If you take the Jīva to be your husband; then Jīva is Nirāmaya (free from mutations). It is not born. It does not die. It does not stay nor it moves. (15) It is not female nor male nor even neutral. The Jīva is all-pervading, imperishable, one without the second and like the ether it is untainted, eternal, the embodiment of knowledge. It does not deserve any grief. (16)

Tārā said—"The body is insentient like a piece of wood, O Rāma, and the Jīva is eternal and consciousness incarnate. Then with what are the feelings of pain and pleasure associated O Rāma? Kindly tell me. (17)

Śrī Rāma said—"For the person bereft of the faculty of discriminating between Ātmā and Anātmā, the Samsāra exists till there is affinity with the body and senses as 'I' and 'Mine'. (18) This world is imaginary and superimposed on the Ātmā yet it cannot go on its own accord just like a person whose mind hovers always around sense-objects, dreams entirely unreal things in his dream. (19) Due to association with the beginningless Avidyā and its evolute Ahaṁkāra (ego), this world even though false and untrue becomes full of attraction and aversion etc. (20) O good lady the mind alone is Samsāra and the same is bondage also. When Ātmā and Mana assume identity overlapping each other then there comes bondage on account of the assumed identification of Ātmā and Mana. (21) Just as a pure crystal assumes the colour of the object like lac in its vicinity and really speaking it is not the colour of its own. (22) Similarly due to the proximity of intellect and senses the Samsāra simply appears (as real) to Ātmā (even though it is really non-existent). The Ātmā using mind as the means of cognition, enjoys the objects which are the modifications of the mind, feels strongly tied by the Guṇas and is helplessly entangled in the creative wheel of the world. First it creates the qualities of the mind (like attraction and aversion etc.). Then it engages itself in multisided actions white (Sāttvika), red (Rājasika) and black (Tāmasika) and then undergoes the consequences according to the actions. This way the Jīva moves in the (innumerable wombs) bound by its actions till the final dissolution. (23—25) When at the time of final dissolution the creation is dissolved even then due to the attachment with the doership and enjoyership this Jīva alongwith its Vāsanās (latent impressions) and actions, remains under the sway of beginningless Avidyā. (26) When the creation starts again then the Jīva with the mind followed by Vāsanās, helplessly reincarnates like a time machine (clock). (27) When some especial virtuous deeds (done in the previous lives) are active and the Jīva happens to attain holy company with my devotees of placid mind then his intellect turns to me. (28) He inculcates then the rare faith (Śraddhā) in hearkening my Kathā through which he gets spontaneously the essential knowledge of my real form and nature. (29) At that time by the grace of Guru he grasps the real meaning of the Great Sentences like 'Tattvamasi' etc., and through his personal experiences also he realises that the Saccidānanda Ātmā, one without the second is different from body, sense, mind, the vital airs and the ego etc., and becomes instantly liberated. O Tārā, I have instructed the real truth to you. (30-31) The miseries of the world do not bother him who always thinks over what I have said just now. Do you also ponder over with pure and untainted mind what I have said. With the result you will remain untouched by the miseries of the world and will be liberated from the worldly shackle. previous life O one with the beautiful eyebrows you have performed my Bhakti of superior type. Therefore I showed this form of mine for your salvation. (34) By meditating on my form think over what I said. This way doing all your routine work you will not get tainted. (35) Tārā was amazed to hear the instructions of Śrī Rāma. She gave up the grief centred around the body, saluted Śrī Rāma, fully satisfied after the self-realization she became Jivanmukta even though she had the company of Paramātmā Rāma only for a very short period. (36-37) Her bondage though from a time without beginning, was destroyed and she became quite sinless. Sugrīva too hearing what oozed out of Rāma's mouth, was freed from all ignorance and had his mind steady and normal. Then Rāma said to Sugrīva, the highest among the monkeys—(38-39)

By my orders perform the funeral ceremonies of your elder brother through his son Aṅgada as prescribed in the Śāstras. (40) "As you say" said Sugrīva. Then he accompanied by the chief monkey personnels, put the dead body of Vālī on a flowery Vimāna, with all the state honour and required materials, playing on instruments like Bherī and Dundubhi, alongwith the Brāhmaṇas, ministers and the commanding monkeys, inhabitants of Kishkindha, Tārā and Aṅgada did perform meticulously following inscriptural commands all the Samskāras and then having bath came with his ministers to Śrī Rāma. (41—43) He bowed in the feet of Śrī Rāma and said quite cheerfully—

 "O Rājendra, rule over this prosperous kingdom of the monkeys. (44) Being your slave I shall always adore your feet like Lakṣmaṇa". Having been so said Śrī Rāma said to Sugrīva with a smile. (45) "You are undoubtedly my own self. Quickly go with my permission and consecrate yourself as the ruler of the kingdom. (46) My friend, I shall not enter the town for fourteen years. My brother Lakṣmaṇa will come to your town. (47) Consecrate Aṅgada as Crown Prince with due respect. I will live on the peak of nearby mountain with my brother for the rainy season. So after you have lived in the town for sometime launch a search for Sītā. (49) Sugrīva prostrated at the feet of Śrī Rāma and said, "Deva, I will do strictly as you order." (50) Thus permitted by Rāma, Sugrīva in the company of Lakṣmaṇa went to the town and did as instructed by Rāma. (51) Sugrīva adored Lakṣmaṇa in a befitting manner and Lakṣmaṇa came back to Śrī Rāma, saluted him and waited upon him. (52) Then Rāma accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa went soon to a very expansive top of Pravarshana mountain. (53) There he saw a bright and beautiful cave of crystal which was capable of protecting from rain, wind and sun and where fruits and roots were available in the vicinity. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa selected that cave for their abode. (54) Śrī Rāma the best one of the Raghu dynasty, made that mountain as his residence which was full of beautiful roots, fruits and flowers, had lovely ponds full of water clean and shining like pearl and abounding with the animals and birds of various colours. and strengthened by grazing newly sprouted grass and birds while running here and there, whenever happened to have a look at Śrī Rāma they gazed with unwinking eyes. (3) They became standstill like Munis absorbed in meditation. (As a matter of truth) the groups of Siddhas transformed them into the forms of animals and birds as they knew that Paramātmā Rāma is moving on the earth in the forests and mountains in the form of human being. They always presented themselves in service of Rāma. (4-5) One day Rāma was absorbed in meditation in a secluded place. When he woke up from trance Lakṣmaṇa said to him with devotion, love and humility— "Deva, what you taught me earlier removed from my heart the doubt born of the beginningless Avidyā. (6-7) Now I want to hear how the Yogīs in the world adore you through the path of Kriyā. (8) The Yogīs declared it to be the means of liberation. Nārada, Vyāsa and the lotus born Brahmā also (approve of it). (9) O Rājendra, it is capable of giving Mokṣa to Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and people of all the four Āśramas. It is easily practicable means of Mokṣa even for females and Śūdras. Kindly tell this Kriyāyoga benevolent to the people, to me who am your brother and devotee. (10)

Śrī Rāma said—"There is no end to the procedure of my worship O delighter of the Raghus. Still I will tell you in brief one by one as it should be. (11) First of all one should get Brahmanahood through Upanayana (investiture of sacred thread) as prescribed in his own Gṛhyasūtra. Then he should go to a Sadguru and get initiated in the Mantra with devotion. (12) Through the manner guided by him, the wise one should worship me only either in his heart, in the fire, in some image or in the sun-god. (13) Or else the wise one should worship me vigilantly in Śālagrāma. In the morning one should take bath first, for the purification of body pronouncing Mantras from Veda or Tantra as the case may be and smearing the body with mud observing the proper procedure. And then one should perform the daily Saṅdhyā etc., in a proper manner. (14-15) My worshipper should recite Samkalpa for the successful completion of his undertakings. He should adore his Guru with the feeling that the Guru is My own manifestation. (16) If my image is in the form of Śilā it should be properly bathed and if it is in the form of an image it should be only wiped. Then he should worship me with selected incense and flower. This type of Pūjā leads to perfection. (17) The person quite guilelessly should adore me regularly (observing vows) as instructed by the Guru. O delighter of the family, I quite like the decoration of my image. (18) If he worships me in fire, he should pour oblations into it. If I am worshipped in sun god then the figure of sun should be sketched on a Vedī (a platform like erection).

Even if my devotee offers simply water to me with Śraddhā, it is sufficient to propitiate me. (19) What is then to be talked of if he offers eatables, incense flowers, unbroken rice etc. Therefore one should collect all Pūjā materials and then start worshipping me. (20) A seat of cotton cloth, deer skin and Kuśa should be made and then sitting there in front of a deity with purified mind one should make Nyāsa of Mātrkāś within and without. Then he should make a Nyāsa of twenty-four names of Lord Viṣṇu like Keśava etc., followed by Nyāsa of Tattvas. (21-22) Thereafter (following the procedure prescribed in Viṣṇupañjara) one should make Pañjara Nyāsa and Mantra Nyāsa in my image. This Nyāsa procedure should be extended to my statue etc., also without any slackness on the part of the worshipper. (23) A sacrificial pitcher in front of him in the left side and flowers etc., in the right side for offering Arghya, Pādyā (ablutions), Madhuparka and Ācamana one should have four receptacles. Then he should meditate upon that Kalā of mine known as Jīva in his lotus heart transparent by that Jīva, O subduer of the foes. He should invoke the same Kalā of mine in my image also. (24—26) Pādyā, Arghya, Ācamanīya, bathing, clothings and ornaments or whatever materials may be available, through them the worshipper should worship me quite bereft of Māyā. he must have campher, Kuṅkuma, Agaru, sandal paste, the fragrant and auspicious flowers in his Pūjā materials and worship me with them reciting proper Mantras. (28) Offering Nirājana (Āraṭī with five wicks lighted), incense, lamp and Naivedya of various types, he should perform Daśāvaraṇa Pūjā (worship of ten coverings) as narrated in the Āgamas. (29) Everyday the worshipper should offer all Pūjā materials with full faith because I am sated with only Śraddhā. My worshipper, the knower of Mantra should do Hawana (pouring oblations into the fire) after Pūjā in strictly prescribed manner. (30) The wise one who knows the Āgamas should dig a pit in the manner prescribed by Agastya. He should pour oblations into that pit either muttering the Mantra (given by the Guru) or reciting Puruṣa Sūkta. (31) Or else he should pour oblations of Caru and Havi into the Agnihotra fire itself. While pouring oblations the wise worshipper should presume that there is the Lord almighty in the form of a Yajña Puruṣa bedecked with all ornaments and his bodily hue like heated gold. He should meditate upon this form and then after offering Bali to my attendants he should finish the Hawana. (32-33) Thereafter he should perform Japa while remembering me and meditating upon me. Then lovingly he should offer betel leaves and other fragrant materials alongwith it. Then dance, music and sacred recitations should be arranged for me and having my charming image in his heart he should offer salutation prostrating on the ground. (34-35) Then he should take my Prasāda to his head presuming that to be the grace of the god. With due devotion he should hold my feet in his hands and take them to his head and pray as—"O Lord, save me from this terrible Samsāra". Saying so the wise must pay his obeisance to the Lord and then request him to go to his abode while remembering Him in his heart. (36-37) In this way if somebody worships Me properly on the pattern prescribed above he is sure to achieve every accomplishment in this world as well as in the next, by my grace. (38) If my devotee daily offers Pūjā to me this way he gets my Sārūpya; there is no doubt. (39) It is a closely guarded secret, the most purifying, taught by me personally and eternal. If somebody recites it or hears it he gets the fruits of the whole Pūjā there is no doubt. (40)

In this way the Paramātmā Śrī Rāma asked by his devotee Lakṣmaṇa taught this Kriyāyoga the best one to him, the exalted soul and an aspect of Śeṣa. (41) Rāma again assuming his Māyā appeared sad like an ordinary man. Ejaculating the name of Sītā he would have no sleep. (42)

In the meanwhile the wise Hanumān in Kishkindha told the monkey king Sugrīva in a secluded place—(43) "O king, kindly listen to me. I am going to tell you what is good for you. Rāma has already been highly benevolent to you in the past. (44) It appears to me that you have forgotten him ungratefully. He killed Vāli for you who was famous for his bravery in all the three worlds. (45) You are established on the throne and got Tārā who was extremely unattainable. That wise Rāma is living on the mountain top with his brother. (46) He is expecting your visit in connection with his mission of a considerable importance and you acting like just an ordinary monkey, infatuated with passion are not wakeful. You promised for the search of Sītā but do not implement it. You are ungrateful and will be shortly killed like Vāli. (47-48) Hearing the words of Hanumān, Sugrīva was very much frightened and replied to Hanumān—what you say is quite true and correct. (49) Implement my orders quickly and send ten thousands of swift monkeys in all the ten quarters (one thousand each). (50) They should fetch all the monkeys from all the seven continents and the chieftains among them must reach here within a fortnight. (51) The latecomers will be punishable with death sentence undoubtedly. Ordering Hanumān this way Sugrīva entered his apartment. (52) Implementing the orders of Sugrīva, Hanumān the best among his ministers, dispatched talented monkeys to all the ten quarters. (53) Hanumān, the son of wind god, appeased some selected monkeys with the offer of wealth and honour, who were full of merits and valour, were swift like wind and huge bodied like mountains; and despatched them. (54)

Śrī Mahādeva said—Once at the time of night fall, Rāma was sitting at the peak of the mountain on a ruby like rock. His grief caused by the separation of Sītā became unbearable and he said. (1) Look Lakṣmaṇa, my Sītā was kidnapped by the Rākṣasa forcibly. I do not for certain know even today whether the beautiful one is dead or alive. (2) If somebody comes and tells me that Sītā is alive, he will do the greatest favour to me. If I come to know that the virtuous lady is alive, wherever she may be I will get her by force as nectar was taken out of the ocean. O brother, listen to my vow. Whosoever has taken Jānakī will be burnt to ashes alongwith his progeny, army and vehicles. O, Sītā with a moon like face, you are living in the house of Rākṣasa extremely miserable, not seeing me how are you holding your life? To me bereft of you even moon appears scorching like sun O moon faced one. (3—6)

O moon, first touch Jānakī and thereafter touch me with your cooled beams. Sugrīva also became pitiless who does not look at my miserable condition. After getting the kingdom free of obstacles, surrounded by women, busy in drinking wine and the libidinous Sugrīva seems to get ungrateful, it is quite apparent. (7-8) Even though seeing that Śarad (Autumn) has come to make a search for the beloved of mine who have been benevolent to him in past. The ungrateful wretch has completely forgotten me. I will destroy Sugrīva alongwith his capital and kith and kins. Let Sugrīva also be killed just as Vāli was killed by me. Seeing Rāma so angry Lakṣmaṇa said— "Just now I am going sir. Order me. I will kill the wicked Sugrīva and come back to you" so saying he himself took his bow and quiver. (9-12)

Noticing Lakṣmaṇa ready to go Rāma pacified him. Don't kill him my child. Sugrīva is a friend dear to me. (13) But threaten him to kill like Vāli. After so saying come back soon with reply made by Sugrīva. (14) After your return I will surely do the needful. Agreeing with that the mighty valorous Lakṣmaṇa immediately went to Kishkindha in an angry mood as if he will burn the monkeys. "Śrī Rāma is never without Lakṣmī. He is omniscient and he is knowledge embodied yet he is grieved for Sītā like a common man is grieved for his ordinary wife. He is the spectator of the intellect etc., transcending the range of Māyā and its effects, bereft of passion like attachment etc. Then how can the effect of Māyā (in the form of grief) appear in him? In order to fulfil the solicitation of Brahmā, to bestow fruits of his penances to Daśaratha, he has assumed the human guise and taken birth, all people ignorant as they are, have become deluded by his Māyā. (15-19) Thinking of some ways and means for liberation of such deluded persons, to establish in the world his Kathā, capable of removing the sins of the whole universe, to be known as Rāmāyana, the Lord Viṣṇu became Rāma behaving just like an ordinary person, (following the worldly norms) he shows the passions like anger, infatuation and lustfulness to achieve His (divine) aim as demanded by the occasion and time, deludes the helpless creatures. He appears as attached towards all the Guṇas yet he is really devoid of them. (20—22) He is Vijñāna personified. Vijñāna (the spiritual knowledge) is his very power. He is a mere witness. Therefore like sky he is always untainted by the passions like desire etc. (23) A few of the very few Rājarṣis like Janaka but his devotees having their inner senses purified and taintless know him full well and always. So He even though unborn yet takes birth according to the sentiments of his devotees. (24)

Lakṣmaṇa also went near the town Kishkindha and produced a terrific sound of the string of his bow which caused terror among the monkeys. (25) Seeing him, the ordinary monkeys on the top of the rampart did a shrieking sound holding rocks and trees in their hands. (26) Having seen those monkeys (that way) the eyes of Lakṣmaṇa reddened with anger. The valorous Lakṣmaṇa prepared him for annihilating all of them and he stringed his bow. (27) Having come to know the arrival of Lakṣmaṇa, Aṅgada, the best of the ministers stopped them all. He went near Lakṣmaṇa and bade his Pranāṇa by prostrating. (28-29) Lakṣmaṇa, the uplifter of nears and dears, embraced Aṅgada and said—"Go and inform your uncle that I have come deputed by the angry Rāma." "Very well" said Aṅgada and reported it to Sugrīva. (30-31) "Lakṣmaṇa with eyes red due to anger is standing at the gate of the town." Having heard so the frightened monkey king Sugrīva called for Hanumān the best of his ministers and said—"Do go immediately with Aṅgada and pacify angry and brave Lakṣmaṇa quite humbly and bring him in with due respect." After dispatching Hanumān, the lord of the monkeys said to Tārā—(32-34) You also go and pacify Lakṣmaṇa with your soft tongue. When he is cooled get him in the inner apartments and let me meet him O sinless one! (35)

"Very well" Tārā said and came to the intermediary apartment. On the other hand Hanumān with Aṅgada went to Lakṣmaṇa and saluted by their heads with devotion and spoke to him welcoming—"Come on O brave and fortunate prince in without any hesitation. It is your own house sir. (36-37) Entering the palace, visiting the royal ladies and Sugrīva also, whatever you order we will execute it. (38) Having so said Hanumān with devotion held Lakṣmaṇa by hand and brought him into the royal palace through the centre of the cities. (39) Lakṣmaṇa saw the palatial buildings of the chieftains everywhere. Lakṣmaṇa went to the Royal palace which was just like the palace of Indra. (40) In the middle apartment, the moon faced Tārā bedecked with all ornaments and her eyes were reddish due to some intoxicant. (41)

She bowed while addressing him smilingly—"Come on Dvāra (younger brother of the husband) may god bless you. You are virtuous and protector of your devotees. (42) Why are you angry on the monkey king who is your devotee as well as servant. He has already suffered a lot without any support from any quarter. (43) Now it is both of you who provided him relief from excessive sufferings. It is by your grace that the wise Sugrīva has experienced some pleasure. (44) Due to his monkey nature he was absorbed in sex so he could not present himself in the service of Raghunātha. But now the monkeys from different countries will soon arrive, O lord. (45) He has sent ten thousand monkeys O best among the Raghus, in order to fetch monkeys from different quarters who are like big mountains in size. (46) Sugrīva himself accompanied by all monkey chieftains will come and get the ogre race annihilated through them and he himself will kill Rāvaṇa. (47) Today itself he will go alongwith you to Śrī Rāma. Please come to the inner apartments and see Sugrīva in the company of his sons, wives and friends. (48) After meeting him please free him from all fears and take him with you." Having heard what Tārā said the anger of Lakṣmaṇa was cooled down. (49) He entered his inner apartments where Sugrīva, the Lord of monkeys was sitting on the couch embracing Rūmā. (50)

When he saw Lakṣmaṇa he suddenly sprang to his feet like a frightened person. Seeing him Lakṣmaṇa angrily said to Sugrīva whose eyes were intoxicated—"O, crooked Sugrīva, you have forgotten Rāma. The arrow which killed Vāli is waiting for you today. (51-52) Being killed by me you will go the way through which Vāli went." The brave Hanumān said to Lakṣmaṇa who was talking very harshly—"Why do you say so? This monkey lord is a greater devotee of Rāma than you yourself. (54) For the mission of Rāma he is quite wakeful and has not forgotten. See, crores of monkeys have come from all sides O Lord. (55) They will very soon, go on the search of Sītā and Sugrīva will get his mission accomplished. (56) Having heard Hanumān's words Lakṣmaṇa felt shy. Sugrīva also adored Lakṣmaṇa by offering ablutions etc. (57) Embracing Lakṣmaṇa Sugrīva said "I am a slave to Rāma and am protected by Rāma. Rāma only through his effulgence is capable of conquering entire cosmos within half a moment. (58) With all my monkeys I am a help only for the sake of name O lord." Lakṣmaṇa also solicited forgiveness from Sugrīva—"Kindly excuse me for what I said only out of affection O fortunate one. O Sugrīva, we shall go just now to where Rāma stays in the jungle. (59-60) He is alone and miserably sad on account of separation from Jānakī. 'Very well' Sugrīva said and mounting on a chariot alongwith Lakṣmaṇa followed by the monkeys, went to Rāma. (61-62) At that time instruments like Bherī and Mṛdaṅga were sounding. A retinue of bears and monkeys were holding white umbrellas and Camaras beautifying the procession. Accompanied by Nīla and Aṅgada etc., headed by Hanumān, Sugrīva went to Rāma. (63)

Thus ends the canto V of Kiṣkiṇdhākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—While Śrī Rāma was sitting out of the cave in his garment of deer skin, his head bedecked with the crown of matted locks, his eyes big, he was quite calm a beautiful smile was playing on his lovely face; he was in great agony on account of separation from Sītā and was watching animals and birds; seeing Rāma from a considerable distance Sugrīva and Lakṣmaṇa dismounted from the chariot hurriedly and fell down at the feet of Śrī Rāma with immense devotion. (1-3) The righteous Rāma embraced Sugrīva. He made inquiries about his well-being, seated him by his side and offered proper and cordial respect. (4)

Then Sugrīva reported to Śrī Rāma with devotion and humility—"Lord, look at the monkey army coming. (5) The monkeys born on Kulācala, big in the size like Meru and Mandara mountains, residents of several islands, river banks and mountains, all like mountains, all capable of assuming any form they wish, all proficient in warfares, all incarnated from fraction of different gods, huge in number are coming. (16) They are all obedient to you and born from a divine origin. This is the son of Vāli, the handsome one known as Aṅgada, equal to Vāli in bravery, capable of killing Rākṣasa army. These and many others are prepared to sacrifice their lives for you. (17-18) They fight with the rocks and mountain peaks and are proficient in annihilating the enemy. Command them O the best among the Raghus, they are all under your subordination. (19)

Rāma, his eyes full with the tears of joy, embraced Sugrīva and said—"Sugrīva, you realize the importance of the mission. (20) So depute them for search of Sītā if you think fit. Hearing the words of Rāma, Sugrīva, the best among the monkeys, happily despatched the mighty monkeys. This way sending immediately many monkeys in all other quarters, he deputed with great care the mightiest Crown Prince, Jāmbavān and Hanumān of super strength, Nala, Śuṣeṇa, Śarabha, Mainda and Dwivida to southern quarter and ordered them. (25) If you come back without finding Sītā or you are delayed even by a single day after a month, then O monkeys, you will be awarded with capital punishment from me. (26) This way after despatching the monkeys of mighty valour Sugrīva came and sat by the side of Rāma. (27)

When Rāma saw Hanumān departing, he told him—"Take this beautiful ring of mine engraved with my name as a credential. Give it to Sītā when she is alone. Exercise your discretion as demanded by occasion. O the best of monkeys, you will be the final authority. I know everything about your might and capacity. Go. Be your journey successful. (28-29) In this way dispersed by Sugrīva, the king of monkeys, headed by Aṅgada moved around here and there. (30) Roaming in the dense forest of Vindhyachala they saw a dreadful looking Rākṣasa big like a mountain eating deers and elephants. (31) Some of the mighty monkeys thought that it was Rāvaṇa. Shrieking aloud they killed him instantly with their fists. (32) "Oh, it is not Rāvaṇa" so saying they went to another forest. There they felt thirsty but there was no water in sight. (33) Moving in the great forest their throat, lips and palate got parched. They happened to see a big cave covered with grass, creepers and shrubs. (34) They saw the birds like heron and goose coming out of the cave. Their wings were drenched. "O, there is water here. We will certainly enter this big cave." (35) So saying, first of all Hanumān entered. The rest followed him curiously catching hold of each other by their arms. (36) They walked a good distance in the thick darkness and then they saw reservoirs, full of clean water and bee hives. They were like wish yielding trees. There were houses well furnished and full of garments studded with gems. There was a good supply of wonderful edibles but without any human beings. They saw amazingly in that house a lady—Yoginī

The monkeys saluted that great lady with a mixed feeling of devotion and fear. Seeing those monkeys that Devī inquired "What for have you come?" (41) "Where from have you come? Whose emissaries are you and why are you defiling my Āśrama?" Hearing that Hanumān replied—"Listen to me, Devī. I will tell you. (42) Daśaratha was the glorious king of Ayodhya. His eldest son, the most fortunate, is known as Rāma. Under the instruction of his father he came to the forest alongwith his wife and younger brother. His virtuous wife Sītā has been abducted by wicked Rāvaṇa. Thereafter Rāma with his younger brother came to Sugrīva and Sugrīva on his turn inspired by the sense of friendship asked us to search for the beloved wife of Rāma and so we have come. Then combing the jungle for Jānakī we entered this terrible cave in search of water and happened to come here by chance. Now tell me, O auspicious one, who you are or why you are here. (43—47)

Seeing that the Yoginī was pleased and told the monkeys—"Go eat fruits and roots as you wish; drink the nectar like water, come back and then I will tell you about me from the beginning." So the monkeys were their normal self and happy after eating and drinking well. (48-49) They approached the lady and stood before her with folded hands. Then the Yoginī of divine look spoke to Hanumān—(50) "In ancient time there was one Hemā of divine beauty the daughter of Viśwakarmā who propitiated lord Śiva with her dance. (51) The pleased lord Śiva gave this divine town to her. Here Hemā of beautiful teeth, lived for hundreds and thousands of years. (52) I am her friend. My name is Swayamprabhā, the daughter of Gandharva Divya by name. I am engrossed in Viṣṇu Pūjā with a desire for salvation. Long long ago while Hemā was departing for Brahmaloka asked me, "Here you live and practise penances in this place uninhabited by all creatures. (53-54) In the Tretā age the imperishable Nārāyaṇa will become the son of Daśaratha and move around in the forest in order to unburden the earth. (55) Searching his wife the monkeys will come to your cave. Entertain them, bow down before Rāma, offer praises to him in all possible ways. And so you will go to the eternal abode of the lord Viṣṇu accessible only to Yogīs. From here I wish to go hurriedly to see Rāma. (56-57) You all close your eyes and you will instantly go out of the cave. They did it and very swiftly they reached the forest where they previously were. (58) That Yoginī also left the cave and immediately went to where Śrī Rāma was. There she saw Rāma accompanied by Sugrīva and also Lakṣmaṇa. lady spoke in a choked voice and with horripilated hairs. (60)

"O Rājendra, I am your maid servant and have come here for your Darśana. For several thousand years I have practised severe penance in the cave with the desire for your Darśana. Today my penances bore fruit. Today I will bid my Praṇāma to you who are beyond the ken of Māyā. (61-62) Even though you pervade within and without of all beings yet you are invisible. You have assumed human guise covering your real form with the curtain of Māyā. (63) You assume different forms like an actor in a play and the ignorant people do not recognise you. You have descended on earth with the intention of designing the Bhaktiyoga of the great Bhāgavata persons. How can I, dominated by the Tamogūṇa, know you. Those who know or desire to know your real truth O Rāma—let them do it but I desire that your this very form be illumined in my heart. O Rāma today I have seen your two feet capable of giving salvation. By Darśana of your feet the jungle of Samsāra disappears. It harnesses a person on the right path. The ignorant people blinded by the pride of having plenties like wealth, son, wife etc., cannot pray you, now as you are the sole wealth of only have-nots. (64—67) There is only one way to reach you and that is transcending the layer of Gūṇas. You are the only wealth of have-nots. You are sporting yourself in yourself, you are Nirguṇa and Sagūṇa (attributeless and full of attributes)

both. I salute you. You are the very form of Kāla, over lord and devoid of beginning, middle and end. You are equally pervading everywhere. I presume you are the supreme being. O lord, nobody knows your doings in the form of a human being as you are. (68—70) There is nobody favourable or inimical or neutral to you. Their intellect blurred by your Māyā they take you to be so. (71) The birth and sports etc., of the unborn and non-doer overlord in the form of a god, subhuman or human form is just a dramatisation and nothing else. (72) Some say that you, the imperishable, have been incarnated to establish the glory of hearing your Kathā. Some others say that you have taken birth to bestow the fruits of the penances of Kosala king. (73) While others say that solicited by Kausalyā you the omnipresent Lord, have taken birth. Still others are of opinion that you have appeared to unburden earth by annihilating the Rākṣasa dynasty as requested by Brahmā and have assumed the human guise. O delighter of Raghus those who will chant or hear your pastimes, will have (as the result) the Darśana of your lotus feet which is a barge to cross the worldly ocean. I am under the sway of the three Guṇas, evolutes of your Māyā. So how can I know you who are beyond and above the three Guṇas yet their only substratum? And how can I offer my praises to you who are not a subject of speech. My obeisance to you O best among the Raghus, holding bow and arrow, attended by the brother Lakṣmaṇa and Sugrīva etc. (74—77)

Having been so praised, Śrī Rāma, the remover of sins of the devotees, was very much pleased and inquired of his Yoginī devotee—"What desire do you cherish in your mind?" (78) She replied with devotion to Rāma—"Your devotion, O protector of your devotees." Wherever I take birth, do grant me your unwavering devotion. (79) May I always get the holy company of your devotees and be away from the worldly people. May my tongue speak always your name with devotion. (80) May my mind always remember and contemplate your form having hue as of a cloud, accompanied by Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa, holding bow and arrow, yellow garments and the shining crown. (81) Bedecked with Aṅgada, Nūpura, the pearl necklace, Kaustubha and earrings. No other boon I desire O Lord." (82)

Śrī Rāma said—"Be it so" O fortunate lady. "Go to Badari forest. There remembering me you will abandon this body built of five gross elements, will attain me, the Paramātmā shortly." (83) Having heard the words of Rāma like the essence of nectar, she went to Badari a holy place densed with trees. There she went on remembering in her mind Lord Rāma she eventually attained to supreme abode discarding this gross body. (84)

Śrī Mahādeva said—After that the monkeys sitting in a place densed with trees in a worried disposition, somewhat confused in their (fruitless errand) of searching Sītā. (1) There Aṅgada, the superiormost among the monkeys said to some monkeys—"We must have decidedly passed one month in this cave roaming here and there. (2) We could not secure Sītā nor did we comply with the royal orders. (Failed in our mission) if we go back to Kishkindha, Sugrīva will kill us. (3) He will certainly kill me, as I am the son of his foe and it will be a reasonable pretext for killing me. How will he have an affection for me? I am alive due to the protection given by Rāma. (4) Now I failed to accomplish the mission of Rāma. It will be a good ground for the wicked Sugrīva in assassinating me. (5) The sinful is cohabiting with the wife of his brother who is just like a mother. Therefore I should not go to him O monkeys. (6) By any means whatsoever I will commit suicide. Seeing Āṅgada this way full of tears, some of the monkeys extremely pained and with tearful eyes said to the Crown Prince. (7-8)

What for is this grief of yours? We will protect your life. We will live here in this cave quite fearlessly. (9) The town here in this cave is just like paradise equipped with all comforts and luxuries." While they were talking this way in subdued voice Hanumān heard it. The prudent Hanumān embraced Āṅgada and said—"Why do you worry? You should not entertain such evil thoughts. (10-11) You are a darling of Tārā so quite dear to the king also and the affection of Rāma for you, enhances day by day even more than for Lakṣmaṇa. (12) Therefore you should have no fear from Rāma nor particularly from Sugrīva. I am always your well wisher. So my child don't feel otherwise. (13) What these monkeys talked to you about the security living in this cave (is all bogus). What is there in all the three worlds inaccessible to the arrows of Rāma? (14) The monkeys who are misguiding you O best among the monkeys, will not stay with you deserting their sons and wives. How can they? (15) My child, listen to me, I am going to tell you a secret. Rāma is not a human being. He is Nārāyaṇa in person, the imperishable. (16) Bhagawatī Sītā is his Māyā deluding the entire world. Lakṣmaṇa is Śeṣa, the lord of serpents, the very substratum of universe. (17)

Solicited by Brahmā for destroying the Rākṣasas they have appeared in human disguise (Māyāmānuṣa). Each of them is sufficient to and capable of protecting the whole world. (18) We are the attendants of Lord Viṣṇu, the indweller of Vaikunṭha, the Paramātmā who has assumed human form according to his free will. (19) Only through his Māyā alone, we are born as monkeys. In our previous life we propitiated the lord of the universe through penances. (20) With the result we are obliged to become his attendants even in this birth we will render services to him as an act of Māyā. Then again we will attain Vaikunṭha and live there with comfort and peace. In this way consoling Aṅgada they all went to Vindhya mountain. (21-22)

Slowly and gradually conducting search for Jānakī they reached at the feet of Mahendra mountain on the shore of south sea. (23) When they saw the uncrossable and unfathomable and fear generating ocean the monkeys were overawed and they did not know what to do. (24) All of them, worried as they were, sat on the shores of the sea. The mighty ones like Aṅgada etc., started discussion. (25) We have passed a month in this forest moving around in the cave. We have seen neither Rāvaṇa nor Sītā, the daughter of Janaka till today. (26) The punishment from Sugrīva is very sharp and strong. He will undoubtedly kill us. So it is better to die of starvation than to be killed at the hands of Sugrīva. (27) Having so decided they spread there Kuśa grass everywhere and sat with a determination to die. (28) At the same time came out a vulture huge like a mountain from a cave of Mahendra mountain. (29) Seeing the monkeys sitting on fast unto death he slowly said—"O I have got too much food today. (30) I will eat them all one by one everyday." Hearing those words of the vulture the monkeys were terrified in their hearts: (31) This vulture will eat us all no doubt O best among the monkeys. We could not yet complete the mission of Rāma. Nor could we do any good to Sugrīva nor to our own selves. For nothing we will go to abode of Yama killed (by this bird). (32-33) Oh, Jaṭāyu, the subduer of enemy, was quite religious and wise as he died in performing the service to Rāma and he attained salvation which is very difficult to be attained even by Yogīs. (34)

Having heard the monkeys so talking Sampāti said—"Who are you all mentioning amongst you the name of my brother Jaṭāyu which is just like nectar to my ears. Speak up you should have no fear from me, O best among the monkeys." (35-36) The excellent Aṅgada stood up, went to the vulture and said—His majesty, the son of Daśaratha, Śrī Rāma accompanied by

Lakṣmaṇa and wife Sītā was roaming in the big forest and the wicked Rāvaṇa abducted his virtuous wife. (37-38) She was kidnapped forcibly while Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were out for hunting. Hearing her while she was crying, "Rāma, Rāma" the great vulture named Jaṭāyu, the king of the birds, gave him a fierce fight and eventually the mighty brave was killed by Rāvaṇa for the sake of Rāma. (39-40) Rāma performed his funeral rites and he instantly attained Sāyujya (a type of salvation) of Rāma. Thereafter Rāma came to Sugrīva and made him friend in the witness of fire god. (41) Impelled by Sugrīva he killed invincible Vālī and the mightiest one accorded to Sugrīva the kingship of monkeys. (42) The mighty Sugrīva sent us, the groups of strong monkeys for the search of Sītā. (43) He ordered—"Come back within a month or else I will get you all killed." So we in the cave, have been wandering in the forest. (44) Month completed and we did not find either Sītā or Rāvaṇa. So we are on fast unto death to end our life on the shores of the salty sea. (45) If you know O bird, tell us about the auspicious Sītā. Hearing the words of Aṅgada Sampāti was immensely pleased. (46)

He said—"O lord of the monkeys, Jaṭāyu was my brother, dear to me. After many thousand years I have heard some news about my brother. (47) I will help you only through my speech

O lords of the monkeys. Take me to the water front where I may offer ablution to my brother. (48) Thereafter I will tell you what is beneficial for the success in your mission. They agreed and took the bird to the sea shore. (49) He too took bath in the water and gave ablutions to his brother. Then the monkeys again took him to his place. There Sampāti told delighting them that there is a town named Lanka on the top of Trikuta mountain. There in a grove named Ashoka, Sītā is kept well guarded by ogre women. (50-51) I am seeing Lanka, one hundred Yojanas away in the sea and Sītā also therein without any doubt. (52) Being a vulture I am very long sighted, you should have no doubt. Whosoever of you may be capable of crossing the sea expanding for one hundred Yojanas, he alone can come back after visiting Sītā. It is certain. I myself could kill the wicked Rāvaṇa, the killer of my brother single handed but alas, I have no wings. (53-54) You yourselves, only make effort with great care to cross the sea. Then Śrī Rāma himself will kill Rāvaṇa, the lord of the Rākṣasas. (55) Think over who among you is capable of crossing the sea of one hundred Yojanas, entering Lanka, seeing and talking with the daughter of Videha and then again recross the sea back. (56)

Thus ends canto VII of Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyāta Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Canto VIII

The narration of his life events by Sampāti

Śrī Mahādeva said— After that the inquisitive and curious monkeys asked Sampāti—"Kindly tell us everything about you from the very beginning." (1) Sampāti then narrated his life events that happened in the past. "In my olden days when I and Jaṭāyu both the brothers were in the prime of our youth, we were proud of our might. Once to test our strength we flew to reach the solar area intoxicated with our might as we were. (2-3) We went upto several thousands of Yojanas. There Jaṭāyu was excessively scorched. In order to help and save him I covered him with my wings due to brotherly affection. (4) I got my wings burnt by the sunbeams and fell on the Vindhya mountain. Since I fell from a great height I became unconscious, O Lord of the monkeys. (5) After three days I regained my consciousness and saw my wings quite burnt. I was so confused that I could not know in which country or on what mountain I was. (6) Then slowly I opened my eyes and saw an auspicious Āśrama and I went slowly near that Āśrama. (7)

The Muni Candramā by name was amazed to see me and asked O Sampāti, what happened to you? Who deshaped you? (8) I know you. Formerly you were very strong. For what have your wings been burnt? Tell me if you think it proper. (9) Then I narrated very sadly all what I did and said to the ascetic that I would die by burning my body into the fire. (10) How can I hold my life O lord without my wings. When I said so the Muni looked at me very compassionately. (11)

(He said) listen to me my child and then do what you wish. "Sorrow is the offshoot of the body and the body originates from the Karma. (12) The Puruṣa is inclined to do Karma only when he feels 'I'ness and 'My'ness in body e.g., when he identifies body and soul as one. Ahaṁkāra is beginningless, an evolute of Avidyā and inert. (13) It is always pervaded by some sort of shadow of consciousness just like a clod of red iron pervaded by fire with the identification of that so called consciousness the body becomes sentient. (14) Due to the Ahaṁkāra the Ātmā feels "I am the body" and that results in the existence of Samsāra which is the giver of pleasure and pain. (15) Due to identification of immutable Ātmā even though it is false, the Ātmā always feels 'I am the body', 'I am the doer of this action.' (Feeling so) the Jīva does actions and then gets bound by their fruit and moves in the superior and inferior species swayed by virtue and vice. (16-17) He thinks 'I have done enough virtuous deeds like sacrifices and charity. This is certain. So I will attain heaven and enjoy heavenly comforts. (18) Through the same Adhyāsa (identification of body and soul) he enjoys these for a pretty long time. And then when the stock of virtue exhausts, then under the sway of Karma he falls downward though quite unwillingly. (19) First of all he falls in the world of moon and then alongwith the fog he comes down to earth on the plants like paddy etc. There again he remains for long. (20) Then he is transformed into four types of edibles and eaten by the male ones. Eventually the transformation into semen takes place. And it is then inserted into the female womb. (21) Mixed with the menstrual blood and covered by a filmy curtain it is converted into the former shape of embryo within twenty-four hours and gets condensed. (22) Thereafter within five nights it becomes like bubble. And after that within a week it assumes oval shape. (23) Within a fortnight blood appears in that ovum. After twenty-five days sprouting starts. (24) The neck, the head, the shoulders, the spinal column and the stomach—these five portions appear in the following months. (25) Then arms and legs, ribs, the waist, the knees appear within two months one after the other. (26) By three months appear the bodily joints one by one and then in the fourth month the fingers are sprouted. (27) In the fifth the nose, the ears, the eyes, the teeth, the nails, the private parts appear. (28) Before sixth month completes, the holes appear in the ears; anus, male and female genital organs respectively appear and the navel region develops. (29) In the seventh month the head and the hairs—both on the body and head appear and in the eighth month every limb is distinctly developed. (30) O bird, this way the foetus grows and develops in the uterus of the female. In the fifth month itself the Jīva obtains consciousness. (31) Through the fine hole of the umbilical cord the foetus gets nourishment from what the mother eats and does not die guided by its Karma. (32) It remembering all its previous births and the deeds done in every way, parched by the fire in stomach said so—(33) "Born in several thousands of species I enjoyed crores of association with sons and wives; animals and near relatives. (34) Absorbed in maintaining the family I earned money through just and unjust means. I, the wicked one, did not remember Viṣṇu even in dreams. (35) Now I am reaping the consequences in the form of great pain due to being in the womb. I was attached to the perishable body as if it was eternal. (36) I did only what must have been abstained from and never did anything of real benefit to me." This way always experiencing the pain as a result of its own deeds, it thinks—when shall I get out of the uterus quite similar to hell. Hereafter I will only worship Viṣṇu everyday. (37-38) In this way the Jīva always ponders over (its present and past) and afflicted by the mechanism of uterus, somehow it comes out with great pain just as a sinner is released from the hell after a long affliction of hell. (39) It is just like a worm out of a stinking wound. And thereafter it has to undergo so many adversities of infancy and childhood etc. (40) You yourself have experienced these things and everybody knows about them. This is why O vulture, I did not mention the sufferings of youth. (41) The notion "I am body" causes a lot of trouble like dwelling in the hell and the uterus etc. The root cause of all this is the desire of clinging to the life. (42) Therefore it is a prime duty of a person to discriminate Ātmā from the Prakṛti and the two bodies gross and subtle. So the attachment to the body etc., must be abandoned and the real knowledge be acquired. The Ātmā should be taken as quite different from the three conditions such as waking etc., it should be regarded as Sat, Cit, Śuddha (unalloyed), Buddha (the enlightened) and ever calm. (43-44) When the sentient Ātmā is known and the infatuation born of ignorance is done away with; it does not matter whether this body under the sway of destiny falls or continues. (45) And the Yogī does not have to experience pain or pleasure born of ignorance. Therefore till the Prārabdha does not come to an end live in the body happily. Just like a snake discards the slough and does not repent, so must be the attitude of a Yogī towards his body. Now I am going to tell something more O bird. Listen to me. It will be benevolent for you. (46-47)

In the Tretāyuga the immutable Nārāyaṇa will incarnate as Rāma, the son of Daśaratha, and will come to Dandaka forest for killing Rāvaṇa. (48) (He will be) accompanied by his wife Sītā and brother Lakṣmaṇa. There in the Āśrama when both the brothers will be out, Rāvaṇa will steal Jānakī and will take to Lanka. While conducting a search for her, monkeys under the instruction of Sugrīva will come and you will happen to meet them caused by (providence) there is no doubt. (49—51) Then you will report them the location of Sītā with exactitude and then two new wings of yours will sprout (from your body). (52)

Sampāti said—The lord of the Munis (Candramā) narrated all this. Now look for yourselves. I got two new wings so soft, sprouted. (53) May god bless you. Now I will go. You will certainly see Sītā. Make effort to cross the ocean which is almost uncrossable. (54) You are the favourite devotees of that

Rāma who is the cause of sustaining the three worlds and by just remembering whose name even the wicked person crosses the limitless ocean of the Samsāra and reaches the eternal abode of Viṣṇu. Why can't you be capable of crossing this small sea only O monkeys? (55)

Thus ends canto VIII of Kiṣkindhākāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—When the vulture king flew away through the sky, the monkeys were charged with great hilarity desiring to see Sītā. (1) But when they had a look at the ocean full of aquatic animals like crocodiles and dreadful looking on account of mighty high waves and uncrossable like sky, they talked together—"How shall we cross it?" Aṅgada said—"Listen to me O monkeys. (2-3) You are all very strong, brave and have performed many valorous deeds. Who among you will perform the royal job by crossing the ocean? (4) It is he who will be undoubtedly life-giver to these monkeys. So whichever mighty brave may feel equal to the job, may get up before me immediately. (5) He will be the saviour of all the monkeys and protector of Rāma and Sugrīva also without doubt. (6) When the Crown Prince has said so all monkey soldiers kept silent.

They looked at each other but spoke nothing. (7)

Āṅgada said—All of you please narrate your strength in regard of performing this task. Then we will assess who is capable of accomplishing it." Having heard Āṅgada the brave monkeys individually stated their strength. They first stated their capacity to cross ten Yojanas. Other one said that he could go twenty and some thirty and so on and so forth. (8-9) While all of them—they had the capacity to cross below one hundred Yojanas, Jāmbavān spoke in the midst of the monkeys—"When the lord incarnated as Trivikrama his legs were equal to the earth in size and I made a circumambulation twenty-one times around his feet. Now I am old and unable to cross the ocean. (10-11) Āṅgada now said "I am sure to reach the other shore of the ocean but I do not know if I can come back recrossing it." (12) Jāmbavān said "You are our ruling king. It is not proper to depute you even though you are quite capable of it." (13)

Āṅgada said—"If so let us sleep on the Kuśa grass (and die) because when nobody can do the job, how can we live. (14) Jāmbavān said to him "My child I will show you the person through whom our mission will be accomplished instantly." (15) After so saying Jāmbavān addressed Hanumān seated there. O Hanumān, while such a big job is waiting for you how is it that you are sitting silent in a corner like one who knows nothing. O mighty one, show your valour. You are the son of wind-god himself and equally valorous. (16-17) You have been given birth by the great Pavanadeva in order to render service to Rāma. While you were just born you saw the son rising in east. You thought it is a ripe fruit so as a matter of your childish prank you sprang five hundred Yojanas in order to have that fruit and then fell on the ground. (18-19) Therefore who can describe the glory of your might? Get up. Do this job of Rāma and save us O Suvrata. (20) Having heard Jāmbavān, Hanumān was immensely pleased. He roared a lion's roar tearing apart the very cosmic egg. He assumed a body like mountain and was just like another Trivikrama. (He said) I will cross the sea; burn Lanka to ashes, killing Rāvaṇa with his kith and kins, bring Jānakī to Rāma or else roping Rāvaṇa by neck, holding him in my left hand and Lanka alongwith all its mountains and will throw before Rāma. Or else I will simply come back after seeing auspicious Jānakī. (21-24) Hearing Hanumān's words Jāmbavān said to him—"May god bless you. Come back only after seeing Jānakī bedecked with all auspicious characteristics. (25) Afterwards you will show your valour in the battle by the side of Rāma. God bless you while going through the sky. (26)

With such blessings the monkey chieftains sent him off and he climbed on the top of Mahendra mountain and there he assumed a body looking most wonderful. (27-28) At that time all creatures looked at Hanumān who was huge like a big mountain; his bodily hue was golden and his beautiful face was red and his large arms appeared like big snakes. (29)

Śrī Mahādeva said—Prepared to cross the ocean which expanded for one hundred Yojanas, full of crocodiles, Hanumān, the son of wind-god, the bliss solidified said while contemplating on Śrī Rāma the Paramātmā—"Let all the monkeys see me going through sky like the infallible great arrow shot by Rāma. I will see today itself Jānakī the spouse of Rāma. (1-3) Surely I will be successful and see Rāma again whose name having remembered only once at the hour of departure, a person gets crossed the uncrossable ocean of Samsāra and reaches His abode, then why can't I, his messenger and holding his ring with me? (4-5) I will cross this small sea meditating upon Him in my heart. Saying so Hanumān stretched his arms and tail straightened his neck, looked at the sky and folded his hind legs, facing towards south, he the valorous like wind-god, took a jump. (6-7) While the gods were looking at him he went swiftly through the sky. When gods saw that the son of wind is going speedily they decided to test his power and said—

 "This mighty monkey valorous like wind-god is going. (8-9)
 We do not know about his might whether he will be able to get entry in Lanka or not. Thinking so they told Surasā the mother of serpents out of curiosity—"Do you go and present some obstacle before the monkey. (10-11) Find out his might and intelligence and come back soon." Having been so entrusted she quickly went for creating some obstacle before Hanumān. (12)

Barricading the path standing before Hanumān she spoke to him—"Come on. Enter soon in my mouth O wise one. (13)
 I am starving and the gods have sent you to be my food."
 Hanumān replied, "O mother, under the instruction of Rāma
 I am going to see Jānakī. I will very soon come back and then reporting the news of her well-being to Rāma I will enter your mouth. Give me way O Surasā, my obeisance to you." After that Surasā again said I am hungry. You may go only after entering my mouth otherwise I will eat you away. Then Hanumān said—open your mouth quickly. I will enter into it and go as I am in a hurry. So saying Hanumān stretched his body upto one Yojana and stood before her. (14—18) Seeing Hanumān's body Surasā extended her mouth to five Yojanas and Hanumān immediately doubled his body. (19) Then Surasā

(21) He entered her mouth and instantly came out and stood before her and said "I entered your mouth and came out. My obeisance to you." (22) When Hanumān was so saying she told him "Go. O best among the talented ones, fulfil the mission of Rāma. (23) I am sent by gods who wanted to know about your capability, O monkey. Seeing Sītā you will sure come back and see Rāma. Now go." (24) So saying she went to heaven and Hanumān again proceeded through the sky like Garuḍa the king of the birds. (25) The ocean also (when saw Hanumān) asked the Maināka, a mountain made of gold and ruby—"Look, it is the mightiest Hanumān the son of wind-god, going to fulfil the mission of Rāma. Be friendly to him. I was made by the sons of Sagara, ages ago, so I am called Sāgara. Lord Rāma, son of Daśaratha is from that dynasty. This great monkey is going to fulfil his mission. (26—28) Get up immediately from the water so that he might take some rest on you and then go. 'Very well' Maināka said and then came above the water level very high. (29) It was full of so many peaks built of ruby and on the top he stood in the form of a man and said to Hanumān who was on his flight—O great monkey I am Maināka. (30) I am instructed by the ocean to provide rest to you, O Māruti. Come, eat some ripe fruits tasty like nectar. (31) Take rest for a moment and then go as you please." Having been so said Hanumān replied to him—I am Hanumān the son of wind. I am going on mission to do a job for Rāma. How can I take food or rest. I must go immediately. (32-33) After saying so he simply touched the peak with his fingers and went ahead. He must have covered some distance when Chāyāgrāhī (a demon who lived in the ocean and used to hunt the flying creatures by catching hold of their reflection in the water) caught hold of his shadow. (34) It was a dreadful demoness named Simhikā who always lived in the water and when opportuned, caught hold of the reflection of the flying creatures and ate them. (35) When she caught hold of him, the mighty Hanumān wondered for a moment—who is it checking my speed and making obstacle? (36) No body looks anywhere. It is creating a sense of surprise in me." So thinking Hanumān looked down. (37) There he saw the huge bodied Simhikā dreadful of appearance. He took a dive swiftly in the water and kicked her with his feet angrily. (38) Again he sprang up and took to the south. He reached the southern shore dense with fruit trees. (39) Full of various birds and animals covered with various flowery creepers. Then he saw the town situated at the top of Trikuta mountain. (40) It was fenced by ramparts and trenches. It was a matter of concern to him how to enter the town. (41)

He decided to enter the town protected by Rāvaṇa during the night assuming a small form. So thinking he made a stay there and went to Lanka (at an appropriate time). (42) Assuming a very small body that mighty Hanumān entered through the gate, there he was encountered by a demoness as if Lanka itself was personified in her. (43) She saw Hanumān entering and threateningly questioned him—"Who are you in the form of a monkey unmindful of my presence? (44) You are entering into the city like a thief during the night. What do you intend to do? Saying so her eyes red with anger she kicked him. (45) Hanumān also gave a slight punch with his left fist. She fell down on the ground vomiting blood profusely. (46) Then she somehow got up and said to mighty Hanumān—O Hanumān, go. May god bless you. You have conquered Lanka, O sinless one. (47) Long long ago I was told by Bāhmā that in the twenty-eighth Tretā, the immutable Nārāyaṇa will take birth as Rāma, the son of Daśaratha and his Yogamāyā will be born as Sītā in the house of Janaka. I once solicited Him for unburdening the earth. (48-49) That Rāma alongwith his wife and brother would go to the forest. There Rāvaṇa would kidnap Mahāmāyā Sītā. इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे सुन्दरकाण्डे प्रथमः सर्गः ॥ १ ॥

Sugrīva would be established and Sugrīva would send many monkeys in the search of Sītā. (51) Then one monkey will come near you in the night. Scolded by you he will strike you with his fist. (52) And then when you feel anguished after he strikes you, O sinless one, then will herald the end of Rāvaṇa, there is no doubt. (53) Therefore O sinless one by conquering me the Lanka you have conquered all. In the inner portion of Rāvaṇa's palace there is a beautiful pleasure garden. (54) In the centre of it there is Aśoka Vana full of celestial trees. In its centre there is a great Śimśapā tree. (55) There lives Jānakī well guarded by terrific demonesses. See her and swiftly go to Rāma and make a report. (56) I am blessed that after a very long time I happen to remember Rāghava which is capable of removing the bondage of Samsāra. Even the company of His devotee is very rare. Be that son of Daśaratha pleased and stay in my heart. (57) By the time Hanumān jumped across the ocean, simultaneously the left eye and the left arm of Sītā and Rāvaṇa both and the right eye and right arm of Rāma sharply fluttered. (58)

Thus ends canto I of Sundarakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—From there Hanumān in his subtle form entered the exceptionally beautiful Lanka and moved around every corner. (1) In search of Sītā he entered the royal palace and did a thorough combing. (2) There he did not find Jānakī and then he remembered what the demoness Laṅkā told him. Then Hanumān swiftly went to Aśoka Vana. (3) It was dotted with wish-yielding trees. There were ponds with stairs studded with gems. It was full of several birds and animals and there were golden mansions. (4) It was dense with the trees whose branches were laden with fruits. Hanumān made a thorough search for Jānakī under every tree. (5) And then he saw a beautiful temple touching the clouds. There were hundreds of ruby pillars. Hanumān was wonder-struck to see that. (6) He went ahead and saw at some distance the big Śimśapā tree very thick with the leaves. (7) Even the sunbeams could not penetrate the thickness of the leaves, it was very spacious, inhabited by the birds of golden colours. Under this tree he saw Jānakī surrounded by the demonesses. (8) Hanumān saw Sītā as if it was a goddess on the earth, only one braid of hairs, lean and thin, sorrowful in soiled garment. (9)

(10—20)

Sleeping on the ground, merged in grief, muttering Rāma, Rāma, finding no saviour, thinned due to observing fast, the auspicious one. (10)

Hiding himself behind the thick leaves Hanumān saw her and said to himself "I am blessed, I am successful by seeing Sītā". (11) It is only I who served the purpose of Rāma, the Paramātmā." In the meanwhile suddenly arose a shrieking noise out side the gynaeceum. (12) "What is this" he wondered and completely hid himself in the leaves. He saw Rāvaṇa coming surrounded by several women. (13) Rāvaṇa was ten-faced and twenty-armed like a heap of black collyrium. He was amazed to see him and hid himself behind the leaves. (14) "How soon may I meet my end at the hands of Rāma? What is the reason that Rāma is not coming even for Sītā." This is how he always thought of Rāma in his heart. That day in the last hour of the night the Rākṣasa king Rāvaṇa saw in a dream that some monkey, capable of assuming any form he likes, very small and subtle, sent by Rāma, has arrived and is watching from the tip of a tree. (16-17) Seeing this strange dream he thought within himself. May be the dream is true so let me do one thing. (18) I should get Jānakī badly wounded with the arrows of my words. The monkey will see it and will report it to Rāma. (19) So thinking he quickly went near Sītā. Hearing the tinkling sound of anklets and girdles the beautiful Sītā was terrified and she shrank within herself, she was looking at the ground with tearful eyes and her heart was wholly dedicated to Rāma. (20-21)

Rāvaṇa also said to Sītā after seeing her—"O one with the beautiful waist and eyebrows, why are you unnecessarily shrinking within you after seeing me. (22) Rāma with his brother lives among the wild ones. Sometimes he is seen and sometimes unseen. (23) I sent a number of persons to see him but even though they tried to find him everywhere but could not. (24) What will you do with Rāma who is always indifferent to you. You always embraced him and he was always close to you. (25) (Yet) Rāma has no affection in his heart for you even though he enjoyed all pleasures provided by you and even your qualities he does not acknowledge. He is so ungrateful devoid of good qualities and base. You, his virtuous wife, have been abducted by me and you are drowning in misery and sorrow even then he does not come. He does not have any affection for you. So why should he come? He is absolutely powerless, has no affinity for you, proud, foolish yet he thinks that he is wise. (26—28) What will you do with that wretched fellow quite averted to you O beautiful lady. Accept me, the best among the Asuras, and who am full of love for you. (29) If you accept me, you

Having heard Rāvaṇa's words, Sītā got angry and she spoke interposing a blade of grass between her and Rāvaṇa and looking to the ground. (31) "Decidedly you were afraid of Rāma when you assumed a form of Samīnyāsī and abducted me while both were absent just as a dog takes away the oblation material from the sacrificial canopy. O wicked fellow you will get the fruit of that very soon when your body will be torn apiece with the arrows of Rāma. (32-33) Then you will know that Rāma is superhuman. When you will go to the abode of Yama. O the meanest among the Rākṣasas, you will shortly see that Rāma alongwith Lakṣmaṇa comes in order to kill you by either drying the ocean with his arrows or building a bridge of arrows over it. (34-35) He will kill you alongwith your sons and army and take me to his capital." Rāvaṇa when heard harsh words of Sītā became infuriated. (36) The angered Rāvaṇa, his eyes red, drew his sword immediately to kill Sītā the daughter of Janaka. (37) Mandodarī stopped him being the well-wisher of her husband. She said—"Leave this woman. She is forlorn, sorrowful, pitiable and only a skeleton. (38) There are many beautiful and highbred women with their intoxicating eyes belonging to Deva, Gandharva and Nāga species who are very enthusiastic to get you. (39) Then the ten-headed demon asked the demonesses of horrifying faces—"In order to entice Sītā and make her willingly prepared to accept me as her husband, apply any method by threatening or cajoling or giving even respect. (40) If Sītā comes under my control within two months it is alright. She will enjoy the princely comforts alongwith me. If even after two months she does not agree to bed with me, kill her and present to me for my breakfast. (41-42) After so saying he went alongwith his wives to his gynaeceum and there the demonesses came to Sītā and started frightening her in their own way. (43) One of them told Sītā—"Your youth has gone a waste. By accepting Rāvaṇa you can make it meaningful. (44) Another told angrily—"There is no sense in making more delay." Still another said—"Cut her limbs, each separately." Still another took sword and was ready to kill Sītā. Still another with her horrifying face widened, tried to frighten. (45-46)

But Trijaṭā, an old demoness, stopped those terrifically faced demonesses who were frightening her and said—"O evil demonesses, listen to what I say. It will do good to you. (47-48) Don't frighten this wailing Jānakī. On the contrary I have just seen a dream. There I saw the lotus eyed Rāma alongwith Lakṣmaṇa mounting on white Airāvata has come. Burning the entire Lanka, killing Rāvaṇa in battle taking Jānakī in His embrace. He has been seen by me at the top of the mountain. On the other hand Rāvaṇa and his sons and grand sons with their oiled bodies, quite naked, garlands of skulls in their neck were drowning in pond full of dung. Vibhīṣaṇa was seen near Rāma happily serving him sitting by his feet. (Take it from me) that Rāma will kill Rāvaṇa with his entire clan, appointing Vibhīṣaṇa as the king, holding Sītā, the beautiful faced one, in his lap, will go to his capital there is no doubt. (49—54)

Hearing Trijaṭā say so, those demonesses were terrified. They became silent and ultimately slept. (55) Being threatened by the demonesses Sītā was terrified and extremely sad. Finding nowhere a saviour she became unconscious due to sorrow. (56) Her eyes were full of tears. Thinking over the situation she said to herself—"The next morning these demonesses will eat me away so what means may I find to die now itself. (57) Even though she decided to put an end to her life yet could not find a way for that. So she was overwhelmed by sorrow and wept loudly for long holding a twig of a tree in her hand. (58)

Thus ends canto II of Sundarakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—(Sītā was thinking) why not to hang myself and die? Without Rāma what is the sense in living among these Rākṣasa ladies. (1) The long braid of my hairs will be enough for hanging myself. Hanumān saw that Sītā was now determined to kill herself. He thought for a moment and Hanumān in his subtle form spoke slowly and softly so that Sītā might hear. (2-3) There was a great king Daśaratha the descendent of Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the ruler of Ayodhya. He had four sons famous all over the world. All of them had divine characteristics. They are Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Bharata and Śatrughna. (4-5) The eldest son Rāma under the instruction of his father came to Dandaka alongwith his wife Sītā and brother Lakṣmaṇa. (6) The great souled Rāma lived in Panchavati on the banks of Gautamī. There, while Rāma was absent, the wicked Rāvaṇa kidnapped Sītā, the daughter of Janaka. Thereafter the extremely sad Rāma started search for Jānakī and saw Jaṭāyu, the king of the birds, fallen on the ground. He sent Jaṭāyu to heaven and Himself reached Rishyamuka very soon. (7—9) There the self realised Rāma befriended Sugrīva after killing Vāli who forcibly possessed the wife of Sugrīva. (10) Enthroned Sugrīva and established the norm of friendship. Sugrīva on his part sent everywhere monkeys quite equal to him in the search of Sītā. I am one of them, a friend and minister of Sugrīva. A monkey. (11-12) Getting the clue from Sampāti I jumped over the sea expanding one hundred Yojanas, came to Lanka while searching the auspicious Jānakī. (13) Slowly combing the Aśoka garden came to this Śimśapā tree and saw here Jānakī full of grief and sorrow. (14) I have been blessed to have come here to the queen of Rāma, a goddess in person. Saying so the wise Hanumān stopped. (15)

Sītā heard it all one by one and was amazed. "What have I heard this in the sky as if spoken by the wind itself." (16) Is it a dream or hallucination of the mind? Or is it possible to be true? Since I do not have a sleep at all because of the sorrow and since I am very clearly hearing it so there is no chance of it being hallucination. (17) He who said these words like nectar to my ears may that fortunate and sweet of tongue, appear before me. (18) So hearing the words of Jānakī, Hanumān came out from behind the leaves, slowly climbed down the tree and stood before Sītā. (19) Hanumān, his body of the size of sparrow, his mouth red and the body of yellow colour, slowly bade his Praṇāma to Sītā with folded hands and stood before her. (20) Jānakī was again afraid. She thought it is Rāvaṇa who came in the shape of an illusory monkey in order to delude me. (21) Thinking so she kept mum, having her face downwards. Hanumān again said "O Devī Sītā, what you suspect (is not correct). (22) I am not that what you think. Give up your suspicion and fear. I am the servant of Rāma, the king of Kosala and the Paramātmā. (23) I am a minister of monkey king Sugrīva. O one capable of giving auspiciousness." (24)

Having so heard Jānakī asked Hanumān who was standing with folded hands how the friendship of human beings and monkeys could be possible as you say that you are a servant of Rāma. Then Hanumān pleased within himself and standing before Jānakī said again. (25-26) As directed by Śabarī Rāma came to Rishyamuka where Sugrīva was already there and he saw Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. (27) He became suspicious and sent me to find out the intention of Rāma. I went to Rāma in the guise of a Brahmacārī. (28) Knowing the good intention of Rāma I seated the two on my shoulders and took them to Sugrīva and caused Rāma and Sugrīva to become friends. (29) Vāli had forcibly possessed the wife of Sugrīva. Rāma killed him with a single shot of arrow and coronated Sugrīva on the throne. (30) Sugrīva on his turn sent the mighty brave monkeys in all the quarters to make a search for you. (31) When I was just to depart Rāghava told me affectionately. (32) The entire mission of mine depends upon you O delighter of wind god. Communicate to Sītā the well-being of mine and Lakṣmaṇa. This ring of mine as the best credential on which my name has been engraved, give to Sītā. (33-34) Having so said he took off the ring from his finger and gave it to me. I brought it with great care O Devī. See it is for yourself. (35) And Hanumān handed over the ring to Sītā and bade his Praṇāma and stood at some distance with his folded hands. (36)

Sītā was happy to see the ring having the name of Rāma engraved. She held the ring at her head. Joyful tears rolled down. (37) (She said) O monkey, you are a giver of life to me and certainly wise. You have devotion for Rāma. You are doing what he cherishes. So I have faith in you. (38) Had it not been so he could not have sent a third person to me. Hanumān, you have seen for yourself the calamity befallen on me. (39) Narrate everything to Rāma so that he feels pity on me. My life is just for two months O good one. (40) If Rāma does not come by then the villain will eat me. Therefore he should make hurry and come with the monkey king Sugrīva accompanied with the other monkey chieftains, kill Rāvaṇa in the battle alongwith his sons and army. If the lord gets me released this way it will be the only thing becoming of him. O brave one, it is at that time that you should narrate his valour as already stated so that Rāma might kill Rāvaṇa soon and liberate me. (41-43) By doing so you will also be entitled for virtue through your oral services. Hanumān also told her—O Devī, as I have seen things (it appears to me) Rāma with Lakṣmaṇa, Sugrīva and the army will come soon quite equipped with his weapons and will kill Rāvaṇa through his valour. (44-45) And will take you to Ayodhya there is no doubt. Then Jānakī asked him how will Rāma cross the expanding ocean even though he is matchless with his immeasurable valour alongwith the monkey army and the monkey chiefs? Hanumān said—"The two best among men will come here on my shoulders. Sugrīva also with the army will come here through the sky crossing this expanding ocean within a moment and will annihilate all the Rākṣasas for your sake. Now permit me O Devī, I will soon go back to see Rāma and still sooner I will come back to you with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. O Devī, give me some token of credence so Rāma may believe what I say and now I am eager to depart. Then Sītā thought a little and then that lotus eyed one unbraided her locks and gave him the Cūḍāmaṇi. She said that with this O the king of monkeys, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa will believe you. (46—52)

To earn his confidence I am telling you something more O virtuous one. Once on Chitrakuta mountain in a secluded corner Rāma was sleeping, with his head in my lap. (53) The son of Indra came in the guise of a crow and struck me more than once with his claws and beak at my big toe red in colour. He perhaps thought that it was a piece of flesh. (54) Then Rāma woke up and saw my foot wounded. He asked who is the wicked fellow who did this, quite inimical to me? (55) So saying he saw before him the crow coming again and again to me. His claws and beak were smeared with blood. (56) He took a piece of grass and charged it with some divine weapon and sportively hurled it at the crow. The grass was burning. (57) The weaponised grass charged after the crow and the crow fled to all the spheres but even gods like Indra and Brahmā could not be a safeguard to him. (58) Then eventually he came back and fell at the feet of the kind Rāma extremely terrified. When Rāma saw him soliciting shelter he told him. (59) This weapon of mine does never miss its aim. So give one of your eyes and go from here. Then the crow gave its left eye and went away. In spite of having such a valour, why is the same Rāma neglecting me now? Hearing what Sītā said Hanumān also replied. (60-61)

Devī, if Rāma comes to know that you are here in Lanka

he will instantly burn the entire Lanka to ashes alongwith all its ogre inhabitants. (62) Jānakī asked—"My child, how will you fight with the demons? You are so small and all the monkeys must be like you." (63) Lo! He immediately showed to Sītā his previous form which was as big as mountain like Meru and Mandara and a source of terror to Rākṣasas. (64) Sītā saw Hanumān in his present form like a huge mountain and was charged with great joy. She said to the best of the monkeys. (65) O mighty one, you are competent enough. The demonesses will see you. May your journey be happy. Go to Rāma swiftly. (66)

The hungry Hanumān said "After seeing you, I would like to breakfast with these fruits in front of you. (67) Permitted by Jānakī he had a sumptuous meal of fruits and he came back to Sītā saluted her, obtained her permission and started. He could have hardly covered some distance he thought within him. (68) If an envoy coming on a certain errand of a master does not do some side business beneficial to his master even though not specifically instructed to do so is of the meanest type. (69) Therefore I must do something more and having seen Rāvaṇa and talked to him then I will go to see Rāma. (70) Having so decided in his mind he uprooted the trees of Aśoka Vana and he made the garden without trees within a moment. (71)

Excepting the tree under which Sītā was seated he destroyed the entire garden. When the demonesses saw him destroying the garden, they asked Jānakī—"Who is this mighty and brave monkey." (72-73)

Jānakī said—you yourselves may be knowing the Māyā of Rākṣasas. I do not know him. I am already plunged in my sorrow. (74) Having so heard from Jānakī the frightened demonesses went to Rāvaṇa and reported what Hanumān had done. (75) "O lord, some exceptionally brave creature in the guise of a monkey talked something with Sītā and within no time he uprooted the entire Aśoka garden and demolished the mansion containing the temple also. He is of illimitable valour. (76) He killed all guards of the mansion and he is still there. Rāvaṇa, when heard the most unpleasant news, of the destruction of garden, immediately got up and dispatched one million soldiers.

This side Hanumān was standing in the first gate of the mansion, his body like a mountain and an iron pillar in his hand as the only weapon. His tail was a little moving. His mouth was red and his form terrible. (77—79) He saw the great army of Rākṣasas coming to attack him and he roared like a lion. The Rākṣasas were quite perplexed to hear his roar. (80) The Rākṣasas

when saw the terrific looking Hanumān, the killer of all Rākṣasas, hit him with various weapons. (81) The monkey chief Hanumān stood up and with his iron club crushed the demons within a moment like mosquitos, here there and everywhere. (82) When Rāvaṇa heard that all his soldiers had been killed he maddened with anger, sent five of his commanders who were quite arrogant and overbearing. (83) Hanumān with his iron pillar killed them also. Then the angry Rāvaṇa sent seven sons of ministers. (84) And the lord of the monkeys killed all of the new arrivals like earlier with his iron pillar within a moment. (85) Then he again went to the place previously occupied by him. Sitting there he was waiting more Rākṣasas to come. Then came the mighty and glorious Akṣa Kumāra. (86) Seeing him Hanumān with his club jumped high into the sky and swiftly he struck him with the club on his head. (87) After killing Akṣa he annihilated all his army also. (88) When Rāvaṇa heard the death of Akṣa, he in great anger spoke to Indrajit—(89) "My son, I am going where the enemy, the killer of my son is. Either killing him or roping him I will get him near you." (90) Indrajit said why do you speak such painful words? (91) I will fetch that monkey soon, tied by Brahmapāśa." He said so and mounting on a chariot accompanied by a huge number of Rākṣasas the valorous Indrajit went near Hanumān. Then the mighty Hanumān hearing that tumultuous sound raising the pillar sprang up to the sky like Garuḍa. Indrajit saw him flying in the sky and hit his head with eight arrows and then again his heart with another eight, two feet with six and the tail with one and made a terrible roar like a lion. Then Hanumān very gladly raised the pillar killed the charioteer as well as the horses and smashed the chariot into smithereens within a moment. Then the mighty Meghanāda took another chariot and tied Hanumān with Brahmapāśa very soon and conducted him near the mighty king Rāvaṇa. (92—98) By muttering always whose name the devotees cut asunder the bondages of ignorance and reach instantly the supreme beatific abode, effulgent like crores of suns, having the lotus feet of same lord Rāma always in his lotus heart. Hanumān was ever free from all bondages. What was to him the Brahmapāśa or any other fastener. (99-100)

Śrī Mahādeva said—While Hanumān, tied in Brahmapāśa, was going on like a terrified person at the same time he was watching the city. The inhabitants of the city gathered there to see him. They were following Hanumān and angrily beating him with their fists. (1) Due to the effect of the boon from Brahmā, the Brahmapāśa only touched Hanumān and left him at once. Hanumān knew it yet he played the role of a tied person with those ordinary ropes in order to complete the great mission (he undertook) and went to Rāvaṇa. (2) Indrajit carried him to Rāvaṇa sitting in his court and said—"I brought this monkey tying due to the boon obtained from Brahmā. He has killed great demons. (3) Please do whatever you think fit after consulting the ministers. It is not an ordinary monkey. Then the lord of the demons saw Hanumān and then spoke to Prahasta present there like a big mountain of collyrium. (4) O Prahasta, ask this monkey—"Why has he come here, what is his business here? Where has he come from? Why has he destroyed my garden and killed my demons without fault"? (5)

Then Prahasta asked Hanumān with due respect—"Monkey, who has sent you? Don't fear. Tell the truth before the emperor of the emperors. I will get you released. (6) Hanumān then saw his enemy the Rākṣasa king Rāvaṇa who pinched all the three worlds like a thorn. Remembering Rāma in his mind started narrating gladly the virtuous story of Rāma one by one. (7)

O Rāvaṇa, the enemy of gods, hearken clearly; I am the messenger of Rāma who has his abode in every heart and who is the overlord of the universe, whose consort you have stolen just like a dog steals the pious oblation in the Yajña. It will be the cause of your destruction. (8) That Rāma came to Mātāṅga mountain and made friendship with Sugrīva in presence of the fire-god. He killed Vāli with a single shot of arrow and made Sugrīva the king. (9) That mighty monkey king alongwith the crores of mighty monkeys is camping on Pravaṇṣaṇa alongwith Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa. And he is angry. (10) He sent the great monkeys in all the ten quarters to make a thorough search for Sītā the daughter of Earth. I am one of them, a monkey, the son of wind. In connection with the search of Sītā I came here slowly. (11)

I saw Sītā whose eyes are like lotus petals. Being a monkey I destroyed the garden then I saw your army speedily coming holding bow and arrow with a desire to kill me. (12) I killed them and protected my body as the body is dear to every embodied person O lord. Then Meghanāda came and brought me here tying me in Brahmapāśa. (13) Due to the boon from Brahmā the Brahmapāśa left me and disappeared. I know everything O Rāvaṇa yet out of compassion for you I came here like an imprisoned one in order to tell something very beneficial for you. (14) O Rāvaṇa, look into what happens to the world and do not cling to demoniacal tendencies. Acquire divine virtues which may cause the liberation from birth and death and which is for your ultimate benediction. (15) You are born in a family originated from Brahmā. You are the son of Viśravā who was born of Pulastya and brother of Kubera. So you are not a Rākṣasa from the view point of Dehātmabuddhi (assuming Ātmā to be body) and so how can you be a Rākṣasa from pure Ātmabuddhi (from monistic point of view). (16) Since you are immutable, these body, intellect, senses, pain etc., are not yours nor are you body etc., yourself. The ignorance is the root cause of these things and they are unreal like a scene in the dream. (17) It is a fact that you are beyond any mutation because the Ātmā being one without the second, has no scope in it for any mutation. Just as the ether even though all pervasive yet is never tainted; similarly you, the Ātmā though stationed in the body are different from it. When it is assumed that the Ātmā is interchangeably mingled with the body, senses, vital airs and then it becomes subjected to all bondages. (18) When the Jīva realises that it is pure consciousness, unborn and imperishable and embodiment of Ānanda, then it becomes free. The body being an evolute of earth and Prāṇa being a form of wind, both are Anātmā (insentient). (19) Mind—a by-product of Ahaṁkāra and Buddhi being an evolute of Prakṛti—both are not Ātmā. Ātmā is the embodiment of consciousness and joy, immutable, above and apart from the congregation of body etc., and the Lord of these all. (20) 'It is always unblemished and attributeless'—the moment this knowledge dawns in a man, he is freed from the world. So I will tell you the only means of salvation and you please listen attentively O talented one. (21)

attains self-realisation. After that knowing the supreme truth he attains to the supreme abode. (22) Therefore adore the very First and Ancient person, beyond Prakṛti, ultimate, all pervasive Hari, the Lord of Lakṣmī—Rāma. Shun your foolishness and sense of enmity in your heart and adore Rāma who loves those who take refuge in him. Taking Sītā ahead of you, followed by your sons and other family members, offer your prostrated salute and you will be freed from all fears. (23) The person who does not with devotion, meditate upon Rāma, the Paramātmā, beatitude incarnate and one without the second in his heart, how can he cross the ocean of the world full of mighty waves of misery. (24) (If you do not adore Rāma) you will burn yourself like an unprotected enemy into the fire of ignorance and due to the sins committed by you, you will go on falling and falling down and there will remain no possibility of liberation for you. (25)

Although what the son of wind-god said, was sweet like nectar yet the ten-shouldered demon could not tolerate it. His eyes reddened with anger, he burst into conflagration and said to Hanumān. Sugrīva (before me)? I will kill that wretched Rāma alongwith Sugrīva. (27) First of all I will kill you today itself, then the daughter of Janaka, then Rāma with Lakṣmaṇa. After that I will kill that mighty monkey king Sugrīva with all his monkeys within no time O monkey. Hearing the words of Rāvaṇa Hanumān very angrily (looked at him) as if he will burn the demon (and spoke). (28) O wretch, crores of Rāvaṇas cannot be equal to me and I, of the illimitable valour, am a slave of Rāma. Having heard Hanumān's speech the ten-faced Rāvaṇa angrily spoke to a nearby demon—"Cut this monkey into pieces. Let all the demons, our friends and relatives witness it." Then Vibhīṣaṇa stopped the demon with raised weapon to kill him (and said) "O King, the mighty kings should not kill an emissary (monkey) of other kings. (29-30) If you kill this monkey emissary, who will communicate the news to Rāma whom you intend to kill. (31) So think out some other punishment equal to killing for this monkey. Let this monkey go back with some mark seeing which Rāma may come soon alongwith Sugrīva and then you get an opportunity to fight." Having heard Vibhīṣaṇa, Rāvaṇa also said like this. (32-33)

The monkeys entertain a great pride on account of their

tail. Therefore coil cloths around his tail with great care. (34) Then set afire the tail and make him parade the whole city. Then let him go so that all the monkey chiefs see him (in that state). (35) 'Very well', they said and they rolled firmly many pieces of jute and cotton cloth soaked with oil around the tail of Hanumān. (36) And then they set fire on the tip of his tail. The mighty Rākṣasas tied him firmly with ropes and catching hold of him paraded throughout the town making an announcement that he was a thief with the buggling of bugles beating him again and again. (37-38)

Hanumān also intending to do something unique tolerated all that. When he reached the western gate he became very small and came out of his ropings. Then again he became like a mountain and jumped on a Gopura. (39-40) There he took a pillar and killed all the guards in a moment. Then having decided what else was there to be done he started springing from the Gopura of the mansion and then from house to house, springing and jumping he burnt down the entire Lanka inclusive of royal palace and the Toraṇa with his large kindled tail. (41-42) The demon ladies on the top of the mansions here, there and everywhere, were crying 'O father, O son, O darling' etc. (43) Those ogre women—all of them falling into the fire looked like group of goddesses. Excepting the house of Vibhīṣaṇa the entire town was burnt to

(45) The fire being the friend of wind and secondly solicited by Sītā did not burn the tail of the monkey; rather it became very cool. (46) By remembering whose name people get all their sins washed out and cross the fire of three Tāpas (Daihika, Daivika, Bhautika) within no time; how could this ordinary fire scorch the very special messenger of the same Rāma? Hanumān said—"If it is so and if you approve of it, sit on my shoulder and I will take you to Rāma within no time O Jānakī." (6)

Sītā said—"If Rāma crosses the ocean either by drying it or building a bridge by arrows across it and comes here with monkeys and takes me back after killing Rāvaṇa in battle, he will earn an eternal fame. So you better go. I will somehow hold my life." (7-8) Permitted by Sītā this way he saluted her and climbed up the top of a mountain with an intention to cross the great sea. (9)

Going there the mighty Hanumān pressing the mountain with his feet sprang and went with the speed of wind and (on this side) the thirty Yojana high mountain sank into the earth and was labelled with the ground. successfully completing his mission. O monkeys, look, it is Hanumān the best among the monkeys and nobody else. (13) While the brave monkeys were talking to themselves Hanumān landed on the peak of the mountain and spoke thus to the monkeys. (14) "I saw Sītā, crushed the entire Lanka with its groves, talked to ten-faced Rāvaṇa and came back." (15) "We will at once go to Rāma and Sugrīva" having been so said all the monkeys joyfully embraced Hanumān. (16) Some of them kissed his tail while others danced happily. And they all, led by Hanumān went to Prasravaṇa mountain. (17) On their way the brave monkeys saw the pleasure garden of Sugrīva named Madhuvana. Then they said to Aṅgada. (18) We are hungry, O brave one. Please accord permission O wise one. We will eat fruits today and drink honey like nectar. (19) After being satiated we will go today itself to see Rāma with his younger brother. (20)

Aṅgada said—"Here is Hanumān who has done the job successfully. By his grace drink the honey and eat fruits and roots but make haste O best among the monkeys." (21) Then the monkeys entered the garden and started drinking honey neglecting the guards deputed by Dadhimukha. (22) When they were so drinking, the guards struck them and then in return they crushed the guards with their fists and feet. (23) Thereafter the angry Dadhimukha who was the maternal uncle of Sugrīva went along with the guards where the monkey king Sugrīva was. (24) Reaching there he reported to him—"Deva, your pleasure garden, so well guarded for a long time has been destroyed today by the Crown Prince Aṅgada and Hanumān." (25) Hearing the report from Dadhimukha Sugrīva felt happy (and thought), no doubt the delighter of wind-god, Hanumān has come back after seeing Sītā. (26) Otherwise who will dare to cast an eye on my Madhuvana? Moreover it has been done by Hanumān and no other person. (27) Overhearing Sugrīva the happy Rāma said to him—"What are you talking and making a reference to Sītā O king. (28) Sugrīva replied—"Deva, Sītā, the daughter of earth has been seen. All the monkeys led by Hanumān have entered Madhuvana. (29) They are eating everything and beating the guards. Without having fulfilled the mission they could not dare to cast an eye at my garden. So decidedly Sītā has been traced and seen. O guards, have no fear. Go and communicate my orders and get them headed by Aṅgada to me." Hearing those words of Sugrīva they went speedily like wind and told them having Hanumān as their head—"By the order of the king you all go to him. Sugrīva with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa wants to meet you. Then they were immensely happy and all the valorous monkeys hurriedly went through the sky—all of them the best among the monkeys. Led by Hanumān and Crown Prince Aṅgada they all prostrated themselves soon before Rāma and Sugrīva. (30—35)

Hanumān first prostrated before Rāma and then saluted Sugrīva also and said to Rāma—"I have seen Sītā well enough and the sorrowful Jānakī enquired of your well being O Rājendra. She is sitting underneath a Śimśapā tree in the Aśokavana, surrounded by demonesses, without taking any food so lean and thin muttering Hā Rāma, Hā Rāma, grief stricken, in soiled garments having one braid of hair. I saw her and gently consoled that auspicious lady while I was in a subtle form behind the branches of a tree. I narrated your entire biography right from your birth, arrival in Dandaka, the abduction of Jānakī by Rāvaṇa in your absense, befriending Sugrīva, killing of Vālī, the deputing of monkeys by Sugrīva in search of Sītā. (36—41) Many valorous and exceptionally mighty monkeys who are capable of conquering anybody have gone in all directions and I as one of them have come here. (42) I am a minister of Sugrīva and a slave of Rāma. I have seen you, the daughter of Janaka with a stroke of luck and my efforts became fruitful. (43) When

Sītā heard this much narrated by me, her eyes widened and she asked—"Who is it narrating these beautiful words like nectar to my ears? (44) If it is true let him appear before me." Then I appeared before Jānakī in a very small form of a monkey. (45) Saluting her with my folded hands I stood at some considerable distance O Lord. Sītā asked me of my whereabouts like who I was etc., in greater details. (46) And then I narrated everything one by one serially O subduer of foes. Thereafter I handed over to her the ring given by you. (47) That made her confide in me and she said—"O Hanumān, narrate to Śrī Rāma as you see me being tortured day and night. (48) Tell him also how the demonesses threaten me." I said—"Devi, Rāma also is worried on your account and not getting any clue about your well being, grieves day and night. Just now I will go and inform Śrī Rāma of your conditions. (49-50) Just as he learns about you, he and Lakṣmaṇa alongwith monkey chieftains will immediately come to you. (51) After killing Rāvaṇa, his family members and all the ogres, he will take you to his capital. Now give me some token for credence so that the lord may trust me. (52) Having been so said she took her dear Cudāmaṇi from her hair locks and gave it to me and then she narrated the happening what the crow did on Chitrakuta mountain in the

She asked me to tell Lakṣmaṇa—"In the past I said some malicious words due to my ignorance O delighter of the clan. Kindly excuse me for that and make everything possible so that Śrī Rāma may have pity on me and liberate me." (54-55) So saying Sītā extremely miserable started weeping. I on my part consoled her by saying this thing or that regarding you. (56) Then permitted by her I have come in your presence. Before I departed from there I have completely destroyed the favourite Aśokavana of Rāvaṇa, uprooted all the trees and killed a huge number of demons and even the son of Rāvaṇa then I had a talk with Rāvaṇa personally; burnt the entire Lanka to ashes and (after doing this) I have come here immediately. Having heard Hanumān's words Rāma became very happy (and said). (57—59) "O Hanumān, you have done what is difficult even for gods to do. I do not find any return for what benevolence you have done to me. (60) Now I am giving you everything I possess O Hanumān. Saying so he took him in his arms and gave a tight embrace to that best among the monkeys. (61) Tears appeared in the eyes of Śrī Rāma and he felt supreme joy. Then the lover of the devotees Śrī Rāma told Hanumān "The embrace of mine, the Paramātmā, Śrī Mahādeva said—Hearing the verbatim version from Hanumān, the overjoyed Rāma spoke thereafter. (1) What Hanumān did, is extremely difficult even for gods. Nobody on earth could even think of such thing. (2) Who else could jump across the ocean expanding for one hundred Yojanas or could destroy Lanka guarded by the Rākṣasas. (3) Hanumān has done the job of an envoy of Sugrīva from A to Z. Such a one was neither in the past nor will be in future. (4) By seeing Jānakī, Hanumān has today saved myself, Lakṣmaṇa the Raghu dynasty and Sugrīva. (5) The search of Jānakī has been successfully over but the thought of ocean troubles my mind. (6) How shall I cross this one hundred Yojana long sea full of crocodiles and large fishes, kill the enemy and see Jānakī? (7) Hearing Rāma's words Sugrīva said to him—"We will now cross the sea full of crocodiles and fishes, destroy Lanka and kill Rāvaṇa. Don't worry O best among the Raghus. Grief ordinarily spoils everything. (8-9) Look at these mighty brave monkeys who are prepared to jump even in the fire for your pleasure. (10)

First of all make out some plan to cross the sea and thereafter (there remains not much to be done) the moment we see Lanka, I take Rāvaṇa to have already been killed. (11) I do not see anybody in all the three worlds who dare stay before you when you have bow in your hand. (12) I am overconfident that the victory is undoubtedly ours as I see favourable omens everywhere. (13) Hearing the words of Sugrīva that were mixed with devotion and valour Rāma took them at their face-value and then spoke to Hanumān present before him—(14) "We will somehow cross the sea. Before it, give a full description of Lanka which is reportedly invincible to gods as well as demons. (15) Having a first hand knowledge we will try to meet the situation. Hearing Rāma's words Hanumān said humbly with the folded hands—"I will describe before you as I have seen it. Lanka is a beautiful town situated at the top of Trikuta mountain. (16-17) It is enclosed by golden rampart, full of golden mansions surrounded by trenches full upto the brim with clean water. (18) It is bedecked with beautiful gardens and lovely ponds. The houses therein are beautiful with ruby-made pillars. (19) At the western gate there are thousands of soldiers.

mounting on elephants. At the northern gate there are horse-riders with infantry battalions. (20) At the eastern gates there are one hundred million soldiers and similarly the southern gate is also guarded by brave demons in equal number. (21) In the middle region also there are innumerable elephants, horses, chariots and infantry battalions. They are expert in handling various types of weapons and they all vigilantly guard Lanka always. (22) This way Lanka is equipped by various tunnels and cannons. In spite of this all kindly listen to what I did. (23) The one fourth military strength of Rāvaṇa I have destroyed and burning Lanka demolished his golden palace. (24) I destroyed all his artillery and tunnels. O lord I am sure only with a look of yours Lanka will burn to ashes. (25) O lord of gods, let us march with the army of brave monkeys from all sides to the shores of the salty ocean. (26)

Hearing Hanumān's words Rāma said—"O Sugrīva, order all the soldiers for a march." (27) Right at this moment the auspicious time named Vijaya is about to pass. I will start in this Muhūrta and after reaching there I will annihilate the entire Lanka full of Rākṣasas and Rāvaṇa himself alongwith its ramparts howsoever invincible it may be. And I will bring Sītā back. The lower part of my right eye is fluttering. (28-29) Let the army of the mighty monkeys march and the chieftains be

(30) I, on the shoulders of Hanumān, will lead the army and then Lakṣmaṇa may come on the shoulder of Aṅgada and you, Sugrīva, come with me. (31) Gaja, Gawākṣa, Gawayā, Mainda, Dwivida, Nala, Nīla, Suṣeṇa, Jāmbavān and others all capable of killing enemy go alongwith the army. Having passed this order for the monkeys Rāma started with Lakṣmaṇa. (32-33) The lord in the company of Sugrīva was happily going in the centre of the army. All the monkeys were like big elephants and capable of assuming any form they wished. (34) They marched towards south while jumping and roaring eating fruits and drinking honey. (35) They were all saying before Rāma "We will kill Rāvaṇa today." In this way all the great monkeys of incomparable valour were going. (36) Being carried by the two monkeys (Hanumān and Aṅgada) the two (Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa) looked wonderful. They looked like the sun and moon in the sky attended upon by the stars. (37) That huge army covering the entire earth proceeded waving their tail ends, uprooting the trees, climbing on the mountains—the monkeys with the speed of wind. At that time only the innumerable monkeys were seen everywhere. (38-39) Protected by Rāma they happily marched. That army went on marching day and night and did not stop even for a moment. (40)

Seeing the various jungles on Malaya and Sahya mountains they overcrossed first Sahya and then Malaya mountains. (41)

Then one after the other they reached the ocean which was producing a tumultuous roar. Then Rāma climbing down from Hanumān's shoulders, alongwith Sugrīva came near the water and said—"We have reached the ocean the abode of crocodiles. (42-43) Hereafter our monkeys are helpless to go ahead. Let us camp here and discuss the means for crossing it. (44) Hearing Rāma's words Sugrīva immediately made the army guided by the senior monkeys, camp near the sea. (45) The monkeys were disheartened to see the terrific-looking ocean with high waves and full of dreadful crocodiles. (46) They became sad seeing the unfathomable ocean expanding like sky. (They were worried) how shall we cross this terrible sea, the abode of Varuṇa? (47) We have got to kill Rāvaṇa the wretched among the Rākṣasas today itself" this way they were worried and went to Rāma. (48)

Rāma remembering Sītā was feeling miserable. As he assumed the guise of human being so he was crying for Jānakī in consonance with the human nature even though he was one without the second, pure consciousness embodied, the Paramātmā and eternal. Pains etc., do not even affect anyone who is aware of the real form of Rāma. Then how can pain, pleasure, fear, anger, greed, infatuation, pride etc., overpower Him (Rāma) who is Ānanda personified and imperishable? (49—51) These are the marks of ignorance. How can they appear in Paramātmā the pure consciousness? The bodily pain affects one who identifies himself with the body. It has no concern with the sentient Ātmā. (52) In the stage of Samādhi since all dualities disappear there remains only Ānanda. Since the intellect etc., remain no longer there, the pure Ātmā cannot feel any pain. Therefore the pain etc., are the characteristics of only intellect there is no doubt. (53) Rāma is Paramātmā, the person ancient, ever self-luminous, ever Ānanda personified, devoid of all desires but because of association with the qualities of Māyā he is considered by the ignorant persons as sometimes happy and sometimes sad. (54)

even for gods, felt shy. He called a meeting of his ministers and with downcast eyes he told them all—"You all have seen what Hanumān did. (1-2) He entered the impenetrable Lanka, saw Sītā who was beyond approach, killed the Rākṣasas including Akṣa the son of Mandodarī. (3) He burnt Lanka completely, jumped across the ocean disregarding all of you he went back quite hale and hearty. (4) Now what should we do? You are all expert in diplomacy. Kindly discuss thoroughly and find out some way that may be beneficial for me. (5)

After hearing Rāvaṇa's words the Rākṣasas told him—"Deva, what is the cause of fear from Rāma to you who have conquered the whole world in battle. (6) Indra tightly roped was thrown in your town by your son. You yourself conquering Kubera possessed his Puśpaka and now it is in your service. (7) You have conquered Yama and had no fear from his Kāladanḍa (the sceptre of death) O lord. You conquered Varuṇa also only with your thundering roar and all Rākṣasas also (made subordinates). (8) The great Asura Maya being frightened, gave his daughter to you and he himself is under your subordination even now. Then what to talk of other great Asuras? (9) As regards the affront from Hanumān is concerned it was all due to our negligence. We thought it is a monkey. It is disgraceful to show our valour against him. (10) This way we simply avoided him otherwise how could he insult us? If we were played a trick against by Hanumān due to our carelessness it is immaterial. (11) If we knew him how could he go alive and free? Please accord permission and we will wipe out all monkeys and human beings from the entire world and come back or else depute us severally. Then Kumbhakarna made a request to Rāvaṇa the king of Rākṣasas. (12-13)

"What Karma you have started is only for your self-destruction. You were lucky that then (at the time of abducting Sītā) you were not seen by the great-souled Rāma. (14) Had he seen you O Rāvaṇa, you would not have come back alive. Rāma is not a man. He is the supreme Lord Nārāyaṇa in person. He is imperishable. (15) The celebrated Sītā, the spouse of Rāma is nobody else but Lakṣmī. That lovely lady you have brought only for the destruction of the Rākṣasas. (16) Just as some large fish swallows a clod of deadly poison similarly you have brought Jānakī. What else will be the result? (17) Although you have done a wrong thing and that too unknowingly yet be your normal self. I will set everything right. (18) Having heard Kumbhakarna, thus spoke Indrajit—"O lord, accord me permission I will go and return soon to you after killing Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Sugrīva and all the monkeys. (19)

In the meantime there came Vibhīṣaṇa a senior among the

Bhāgavatas and the best among the wise persons. He was constantly absorbed in the devotion to Śrī Rāma's lotus feet. He saluted Rāvaṇa and took his seat near him. (20) He had a fleeting glance on the Rākṣasas like Kumbhakarṇa who were intoxicated for their valour. Vibhīṣaṇa was a bit amazed. He also noticed that Rāvaṇa was in a stage of love sickness. Being ever careful and having his intellect purified he spoke to Rāvaṇa. (21) Kumbhakarṇa, Indrajīt, Mahāpārśwa, Mahodara, Nikumbha, Kumbha, Atikāya—none of them can stand in battle before Rāma. (22) O king you have been eclipsed by the great planet in the form of Sītā. There is no way of riddance from it. There is the only way and it is to return Sītā respectfully with a considerable dowry to Rāma and be happy. (23) You bechove to return Jānakī before the sharp arrows of Rāma covering the entire Lankā start beheading the Rākṣasas. (24) Surrender Sītā quickly to Rāma before the mountain like monkeys, mighty as lions who fight with their nails and teeth invade Lanka and destroy it. (25) You cannot keep yourself alive when attacked by Rāma even if Indra and Śaṅkara protect you; even if you take shelter in the lap of Indra or Death itself and even if you go and enter Pātāla. (27—36)

The wicked Rāvaṇa did not concede to the benign, beneficial and sacred words of Vibhīṣaṇa just as a moribundus refuses to take medicine. (27) Rāvaṇa motivated by Kāla (the death) then spoke to Vibhīṣaṇa—"Look here, he is getting nourished on the delicious food provided by me, lives near me, opposes me who am his benevolent. Undoubtedly he had taken birth as my enemy even though acting like a friend. (28-29) This ignoble and ungrateful man does not deserve my company. 'Iron cutting iron' is totally justified in his case. (30) If any other Rākṣasa had said like this I would have killed him instantly. Fie on you, O wretched in the Rākṣasa family.(31)

Having been so harshly rebuked by Rāvaṇa the mighty Vibhīṣaṇa with a mace in his hand flew from the centre of the court accompanied by four of his ministers and from the sky he angrily said to the ten-headed Rāvaṇa—"I am your well-wisher and whatever I said, it was in good faith. I wish that you should not be doomed. Yet you condemn me. Anyway you are my elder brother and like father to me. (I warn that) your death has incarnated in the palace of Daśaratha in the form of Rāma. (32—34) Mahākālī has appeared in the form of Sītā the daughter of Janaka. Both of them have reached here in order to unburden the earth. (35) It is Rāma (God) who is inspiring you not to listen to my benevolent words. Śrī Rāma is always beyond the range of Prakṛti. (36) He permeates equally everybody and everywhere from within and without. Even though being quite taintless yet appears differently differentiated by name and form. (37) Just as only one cosmic fire permeating several types of trees, appears in those different forms or else a pure crystal appears to have contained different colours in the proximity of those colours so he appears in different forms due to the five sheaths and looks as if he himself has assumed those different forms. But it all happens only in the eyes of ignorant persons. (38-39) Even though he is ever free yet being reflected in the qualities of his Māyā, he is known sometimes as Kāla, sometimes Pradhāna, sometimes Puruṣa and sometimes Avyakta. (40) Although being unborn he creates the entire universe assuming the form of Pradhāna and Puruṣa and although being imperishable himself destroys the world in the form of Kāla. (41) That Lord as Kāla, solicited by Brahmā has incarnated himself through his Māyā in the form of Rāma and he has come here to kill you. Since the Lord is Satyasaṅkalpa (whose intention always comes true So how could it be otherwise (in your case)? (42-43) Rāma will kill you with all your sons, army and vehicular means and I cannot afford to see you and entire Rākṣasa dynasty being killed by Rāma. So I am going to Rāma. After

I have gone, be happy and enjoy sportively your palace for a long time. (44-45) This way the fully contented Vibhīṣaṇa due to harsh words of Rāvaṇa instantly abandoned his house equipped with all paraphernallia, and went to Rāma with a desire to serve his lotus feet. (46)

Thus ends the canto II of Yuddhakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—The fortunate Vibhīṣaṇa alongwith his four ministers came and stopped in the sky before Rāma. (1) He said loudly, O lotus eyed Rāma, my lord, I am Vibhīṣaṇa by name, the younger brother of Rāvaṇa, the kidnapper of your wife. My brother has exiled me and I have come in your shelter. O lord, I advised that ignorant fool for his benediction. (2-3) I asked him again and again to return Sītā, the daughter of Videha to Rāma but he refused to listen to what I said, under the influence of Kāla as he is. (4) He the wretched among the Rākṣasas rushed with a sword to kill me. Then due to fear

I came to you with my four ministers in order to acquire freedom from the bondages of the world. Hearing Vibhīṣaṇa's words, Sugrīva said—(5-6) "O Rāma, this conjurer, wretched among the Rākṣasas, particularly the younger brother of Rāvaṇa, who kidnapped Sītā, is not at all trustworthy. (7) Along with his ministers who are equipped with weaponry, he will kill us at an opportunate time. So permit me O Lord, to get him killed by monkeys. (8) This is what I feel. Kindly tell how you feel about it in your mind. Hearing Sugrīva's words Rāma spoke with smile. (9)

If I wish, O best among the monkeys, I might destroy within half a moment all the worlds with their lords and create it again within half a moment. (10) Therefore I assure him full security. Let him have no fear. So bring him in immediately. (11) I vouchsafe security against all living beings who begs for shelter in me praying but once saying, I am yours, such is my vow. (12) Hearing Rāma's words, the happy Sugrīva brought Vibhīṣaṇa in and presented before Rāma. (13) Vibhīṣaṇa bade his Praṇāma with prostration to Rāma and in a voice choked with devotion and pleasure, with his hands folded he started praising Rāma whose body was of black hue, eyes big and the lotus face cheerful, holding bow and arrow, quite calm and quiet accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa. Vibhīṣaṇa said—My salutations to you O Rāma, the king of kings; salutations to the beloved of Sītā, salutations to you who hold a mighty bow; O lover of the devotees my salutations to you. (17) Salutations to the infinite, calm, Rāma with illimitable resplendence. My salutations to Rāma the friend of Sugrīva and the Lord of Raghus. (18) My salutations again and again to you who are the single cause of the origin and destruction of the world, a great souled one, the preceptor of the three worlds and eternal house-holder. (19) O Rāma, you are the uncaused cause of the universe, you are the cause of its sustenance and you are the final abode wherein the creation dissolves and you act according to your free will. (20) You are pervading all beings, mobile and immobile, from within and without O Rāghava on the basis of pervader and pervaded, and so you appear as the universe itself. (21) The ignorant people whose intellect has been blunted by your Māyā, who have their self deluded and the foolish ones led by their vicious and virtuous actions become the subject of birth and death. You are Indra, the fire god, Yama, Nirṛti, Varuṇa, wind god, Kubera and Rudra O Puruṣottama. (25) You are subtler than the subtlest and grosser than the grossest O Lord and you are the father, the mother and the sustainer of all the worlds. (26) You are without beginning, middle and end, complete in yourself, infallible and imperishable. You are devoid of hands and feet and eyes and ears. (27) Yet you hear everything, witness everything, hold everything and capable of walking speedily O killer of Khara. You are above and apart from the five sheaths; you are attributeless and your own substratum. (28) You are unconditioned (undifferentiated), immutable, formless without having a super lord, you are unaffected by the six stages (birth, growth, change, decay, decrepitude and destruction) beginningless and the Puruṣa beyond the Prakṛti. (29) On account of your Māyā you simply appear like a human being. When your devotees know you as attributeless and unborn they attain salvation. (30) O Rāghava, O Lord, I intend to climb up on the peak known as Jñānayoga through the stares of devotion to your feet. (31) O Lord of Sītā, my obeisance to you. O the best among the compassionates, my salutations to you. O enemy of Rāvaṇa, my obeisance to you. Save me from the ocean of the Samsāra. (32) Then the lover of the devotees Śrī Rāma got pleased and said—"May god bless you. Ask for any boon. I will grant you anything." (33).

Vibhīṣaṇa said—"O Rāghava, blessed I am. There remains nothing for me to be done any more. I am accomplished one now. Through the vision of your feet I am liberated there is no doubt. (34) There is nobody on this earth as blessed as I am; as pure as I am. There is nobody equal to me in the world simply because of your vision. (35) O delighter of Raghus, grant me the knowledge that is the result of your devotion for destroying the shackles of Karma and the meditation through which I may visualise your real form. (36) O Rāma, the king of kings I do not beg for the pleasure derived from the sense-objects. Let there be always the devotion to your lotus feet in me. (37) Rāma expressed his agreement and pleased as he was, he spoke to the Rākṣasa (Vibhīṣaṇa)—"Listen to me. May god bless you. I will tell you the well-considered secret of mine. (38) There is no doubt, I live always alongwith Sītā in the hearts of my devotees, the peaceful Yogīs who are detached from the world. (39) Therefore you always being calm and bereft of all sins meditating always on me will get release from the terrible ocean of the world. (40) Who will read this Stotra or write or even hear it for my pleasure he will get the Sārūpya Mokṣa dear to me. (41) So saying Śrī Rāma, the lover of his devotees said to Lakṣmaṇa—Let him see the fruit of my vision this very moment. (42)

I will coronate him on the throne of Lanka. Fetch some water from the sea. So long as moon and sun are there (in the sky) or so long as the earth is there; so long as my Kathā lives in the world, let him enjoy the kingdom. So saying he got the water through Lakṣmaṇa in a pitcher the spouse of the Lakṣmī got the coronation ceremony performed by his ministers more particularly by Lakṣmaṇa, for the rulership of Lanka. (43—45) All the monkeys gladly made the slogan of 'well done, well done'. Sugrīva also embraced Vibhīṣaṇa and said— (46) "Vibhīṣaṇa, we are all the servants of Paramātmā Rāma and you are the head. On account of your devotion he has accepted you. Therefore you behove to help him in the destruction of Rāvaṇa." (47)

Vibhīṣaṇa said—How much can I help Rāma who is Paramātmā himself? But I will perform the duties of the servants with full devotion and power quite guilelessly. (48) At that very time the great Asura named Śuka deputed by Rāvaṇa, told Sugrīva from the sky. (49) The king Rāvaṇa the lord of the Rākṣasas communicated to you who are just like a brother to him that you are born in a high family and are the king of monkeys. (50) You are equal to my brother and no interest of yours is endangered. It is none of your concern that I abducted the wife of the prince. (51) Go back to Kiṣkiṇḍhā alongwith your monkeys. Lanka is not possible to be conquered even by gods and what to talk of the petty humans and monkeys. (52) While Śuka was communicating the message the monkeys swiftly sprang up and caught hold of him in order to beat him with their mighty blows. (53) Being beaten by monkeys Śuka requested Rāma—"O Rājendra it is improper to punish emissaries. Stop the monkey O lord. (54) Rāma on his part hearing his words and wailing, stopped the monkeys and ordered them not to kill him. (55) Śuka again went to the sky and said to Sugrīva—"Tell me O king, what I should communicate to Rāvaṇa. Now I am going." (56)

Śugrīva said—"Just as Bāli was my brother, so are you O wretched among the Rākṣasas. I will make every effort to have you killed with your sons, army and vehicles. (57) Tell me where you will go after stealing the consort of Rāma. After that with the permission of Rāma they arrested Śuka, tied him and kept him under guards. (58) Already Śārdūla also had surveyed the great monkey army and that Rākṣasa reported to Rāvaṇa as it was. (His report) made him worried and thoughtful and he heaved sighs and sat in his palace. On the other side Rāma looking at the ocean with reddened eyes (said to Lakṣmaṇa). (59-60) Lakṣmaṇa look at this wicked sea that (even though he knows)

I have come yet this crooked one did not come to have my Darśana and pay respect. (61) He thinks that I am an ordinary man and what can I do with these monkeys. You watch today O large armed, I am going to dry up the ocean. (62) My monkeys will cross this carefree on their foot. Saying so his eyes red with anger he took his bow. (63) Took an arrow from the quiver which was resplendent like fire raging at final dissolutionment, put it on the string and pulling the bow he said—(64) "Let all beings witness valour of Rāma's arrow. Just now I will burn the ocean, the lord of the rivers, to ashes." (65) While Rāma was saying so the whole earth with its mountains, forests and gardens quaked. The heaven and the quarters were covered with darkness. (66) The ocean was greatly fretted and due to fear it overcrossed its shores by one Yojana. The whales, the crocodiles, big and small fishes were scorched and frightened. (67)

In the meantime the ocean in person assuming a divine form bedecked with divine ornaments illuminating the quarters with its resplendence, holding in his hands the beautiful numerous gems from within itself as a present for Rāma offered before his feet. (68-69) Bade his Praṇāma with prostration to Rāma whose eyes were red, (cried) "Save, save O lord of the world, O Rāma, O protector of the three worlds. change the nature made by the Lord. (71) The five gross elements are naturally inert because you have created them so. So they do not overrule your orders. (72) O Rāma all the elements are born of Tāmasa Ahaṅkāra. And because they follow their originating cause, the inertia is their innate nature. (73) You are devoid of attributes and form. When you sportively assume the qualities of Māyā O Lord, then you are named by Vairāja. (74) From the Sāttvika aspect of Virāja gods came out, from the Rājasika aspect came the Prajāpatis and from the Tāmasika aspect came out Rūdra. (75) How could I recognise you who have sportively disguised in the form of a human being and veiling yourself with Māyā. (76) Since I am foolish and insentient; how may I know you the attributeless one? Only punishment can make the foolish ones to adopt the right path O Lord. Just as the stick sets right the animal beings. I have come in your shelter O shelter and the lover of devotees. Please grant me security O Rāma, I will give you way to Lanka. (77-78)

Śrī Rāma said—"This arrow of mine is infallible. Tell where should I shoot it. Show me the target soon for this unfailing arrow of mine. (79) Hearing Rāma's words and seeing the great arrow in his hand, the greatly resplendent ocean said to Rāghava. (80) O Rāma, in the northern region there is a country named Drumakulya. There live innumerable sinners to disturb me day and night. Shoot your arrow there. Shot by Rāma that arrow killing all the Ābhīras came back and took its place in the quiver. Then the ocean with all humility said to the best among the Raghus—(81—83) Nala the wise son of Viśwakarmā may build a bridge on my waters. He is competent for this job as this monkey has been granted a boon. (84) (Through this bridge) let the people be aware of your fame which is capable of removing the sins of all the world. So saying and saluting Rāma the ocean disappeared. (85)

Thereafter Rāma with Lakṣmaṇa and Sugrīva ordered Nala to build bridge with the help of monkeys. (86) Then Nala cheerfully built a strong bridge one hundred Yojana long and wide enough out of mountains and trees helped by the monkey-chieftains who were huge like mountains. (87)

Śrī Mahādeva said—In the beginning of bridge-building work Rāma installed the Lord Rāmeśwara Śiva and worshipped him and said for the benediction of the world. (1) He, who having vision of the Lord Rāmeśwara (Śiva) will pay his obeisance to this bridge, will, by my grace, be freed from all sins even like Brahmahatyā. (2) If somebody, after having a dip in the Setusamudra, has vision of Rāmeśwara Śiva, and then goes to Varanasi with due Śaṅkalpa, gets Gaṅgā water, consecrates the Lord with it and throws the (empty) vessel into the sea, undoubtedly attains Brahma. (3-4) The best among the monkeys, Nala built the bridge fourteen Yojanas on the first day, twenty Yojanas on the second, twenty-one on the third, twenty-two on the fourth and twenty-three Yojanas on the fifth day. (5-7) Through that bridge the monkeys quickly crossed one hundred Yojanas and innumerable monkeys besieged Suvela mount. (8) Rāma mounted on Hanumān and Lakṣmaṇa on Aṅgada. Rāma, inquisitive as he was to see Lanka, climbed upon a big mountain. (9) He saw Lanka (from there which was) very expansive full of variegated flags, dense with colourful mansions, and fenced by golden ramparts and bedecked with Torāṇas (decorative arches)—having trenches and tunnels and dotted with cannons. There was the ten-headed Rāvaṇa—on the expansive roof of his palace, ten bright crowns on his heads, sitting with his ministers. He was like a black mountain and dreadful like black cloud. (11-12) Many white umbrellas with the staff of gems were enhancing to his glory. Meanwhile Śuka who was arrested and released by Rāma, heavily beaten by the monkeys came to Rāvaṇa. Rāvaṇa laughed and asked—"O Śuka, have you been tortured by the enemies?" (13-14)

Hearing Rāvaṇa's words Śuka made a reply. "At the north shore of the ocean I repeated your words verbatim. Then so many monkeys jumped and caught hold of me within a moment. (15) They started to injure me with their punches, nails and teeth and tried to annihilate me. Then I made an appeal 'save me O Rāma'. Then Rāma, the best of Raghus ordered to release me and I was released by the monkeys. At that time I saw the strength of monkey army and came to you with an alarmed mind.(16-17) There seems to be no settlement possible between the two parties of ogres and monkeys like gods and demons. (18) Any moment they may attack the ramparts of the town. Either surrender Sītā or give a fierce battle. Do one of the two. But be quick. (19)

Rāma asked me to communicate his message to you. Show your strength and might alongwith your army and relatives, banking upon which you stole my wife Sītā. Tomorrow in the morning you will see Lanka with its ramparts and Toranas completely ruined and destroyed by my arrows and all the Rākṣasas and the army annihilated. Tomorrow I will show extreme anger. So gather all your strength and courage. (20—22) Having so said the lotus-eyed Rāma stopped. O lord, if these four best persons Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa be together, as they are, they themselves are quite competent to destroy Lanka even if all the monkeys stand aside. They can uproot Lanka, they can burn Lanka. His strength, his form and his weaponry as I have seen them, Rāma alone will destroy the town: let the other three stand alone. Look at the monkey army and its innumerable strength spreading over all directions. (23—26) Look, the mountainous monkeys are roaring. They cannot be counted. I will enumerate only few of them—the chief ones. (31) Look at that silvery white monkey, he possesses a great talent and valour. He has swiftly come to Sugrīva and now going back. He is of incomparable valour like a lion. His name is Rambha. He is exceptionally strong and capable of destroying Lanka (single handedly). (32-33) And the other one who is looking towards Lanka as if he will burn it with only his eyes, is Śarabha O Rājendra. He is the leader of one crore chieftains. (34) This is the mighty Panasa and these are Mainda and Dwiwida. That is the bridge-builder mighty Nala, the son of Viśwakarmā. (35) Nobody is capable of describing the monkeys or counting them. All are huge bodied and valorous. All are eager to wage battle. (36) All of them are competent to crush Lanka with all its Rākṣasas. Now I am going to tell you the numerical strength of their armies severally. Listen—(37) Each of them has twenty-one thousand hundred crores, thousands of Śaṅkhas and hundreds of Arbuds under him. (38) O Rāvaṇa I have given the number of armies under only the ministers of Sugrīva. The strength of other monkeys, I am totally incompetent to describe. (39) Rāma is not a human being. He is Supreme and Ādi-Nārāyaṇa himself and Sītā is the primal cause of the world, the cosmic consciousness personified manifesting herself in the form of the universe. (40) This mobile and immobile world is born of the very two. Therefore Rāma and Sītā are the primeval parents of the beings mobile and immobile. O king, how can one afford to be enemy to them. You even though unknowingly brought Jānakī who is nobody other than the mother of the universe. (41-42) What faith can you have in this body which is very momentary, a jumble of twenty-four elements and mainly five gross elements which contains excreta, flesh, bones etc., of foul smell which is the substratum of ego and is insentient, when you are entirely different from it and for which you committed many sins including Brahmahatyā. That body, the enjoyer or sufferer as the case may be, will remain here itself. (43-45) Virtue and vice, the cause of pleasure and pain accompany the Jīva and due to the association with the non-soul e.g., body etc., cause pleasure and pain the day and night. (46) While 'I am the body, I am the doer' this type of egoistic feeling continues due to the ignorance, till then the Jīva helplessly undergoes the process of birth and death. (47) Therefore O wise one abandon your affinity in the body etc. The Ātmā is quite blemishless, pure, the knowledge personified immobile and immutable. (48) It under the sway of its own ignorance, is subjected to the bondage and becomes prey to the infatuation (Moha). Therefore know the Ātmā in the purest way; always contemplate over it. (49)

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे चतुर्थः सर्गः ॥ ४ ॥

Inculcate the sense of dispassion from the son, wife, home etc., as Bhoga one can get even in the species of dogs and boars. It is available in the hell also. (50) You have got a human body equipped with discriminating faculty, more particularly Brāhmaṇahood, both of which are very rare and then you are born in Bhāratavarṣa, the land of action. (51) Which of the wise men will identify the Ātmā with the body and run after the worldly enjoyments? Therefore like an ignorant person you being a Brāhmaṇa particularly the grandson of Pulatsya, always hanker after the trifle enjoyments in vain. Hereafter giving up all these attachments always take shelter in Paramātmā Rāma with devotion. Surrendering Sītā to Rāma be subservient to his feet. (52-54) Freed from all sins you will attain the abode of Viṣṇu otherwise you will be doomed with no chance to upliftment. Concede to what I say. I am telling this for your own benediction. (55) Attend holy company. Adore the shelter giving Hari Śrī Rāghava whose bodily hue is as blackish as black emerald; always accompanied by Sītā, holding bow and arrow and whose feet are always adored by Sugrīva, Lakṣmaṇa and Vibhīṣaṇa. (56)

Thus ends canto IV of Yuddhakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—Hearing the words capable of destroying ignorance, coming out of the mouth of Śuka, Rāvaṇa's eyes reddened with anger and he furiously spoke as if he will burn him. (1) O evil-minded, even though being my servant, how do you talk like a Guru? I am the ruler of all the three worlds. Don't you feel ashamed while teaching me? (2) I could kill you just now but remembering your previous services I leave you although you deserve killing. (3) Right now get going O fool. I cannot tolerate such talks. "As you please" so saying the trembling Śuka went to his home. (4)

In his previous life Śuka was a pious Brāhmaṇa, expert in Vedic lores and proficient in Brahmavidyā. He was following the rules of Vānaprastha, living in a forest and performing all ordained rites. (5) This greatly wise Śuka continuously performed a number of sacrifices to foster gods and annihilate Rākṣasas. (6) Always trying to help gods he earned the enmity of the Rākṣasas. There was a great demon known as Vajradanṣṭra. (7) He always waited for an opportunity to harm Śuka. Sometime Agastya came to the hermitage of the Muni (Śuka). (8)

Śuka worshipped Agastya and invited him for food. The Muni Agastya went to take bath. In the mean time (the Rākṣasa Vajradanṣṭra) got an opportunity and came in the guise of Agastya and asked him—"O Brāhmaṇa if you are willing to feed me, then provide me non-vegetarian meal. (9-10) A considerable time passed I have not eaten meat (of goat). He agreed and made a full preparation of non-vegetarian meals. (11) When Agastya sat to take food that Rākṣasa (Vajradanṣṭra) assumed the form of the wife of Śuka, a most beautiful one, making her unconscious, served human flesh well cooked, to Agastya and just after that the Rākṣasa disappeared. On the other side Agastya got furious to see the unholy human flesh served to him and said to Śuka—"O evil-minded fool, you have served uneatable human flesh, to me. So be a Rākṣasa, live on the earth eating human beings." So cursed the frightened Śuka said to Agastya "O Muni, you yourself have just now ordered me to serve a variety of flesh and I acted accordingly. Now why are you cursing me O Lord?" (12—16) Having heard what Śuka said Agastya concentrated his mind for a moment and came to know what the Rākṣasa did. Then the wise Agastya spoke to Śuka. (17) The Rākṣasa intending to do harm to you has done all this. I cursed you without considering anything O best among the Munis. (18)

Yet my words are infallible and the curse is bound to be true. You will assume Rākṣasa body and will be helping Rāvaṇa. (19) This way live on the earth till Rāma alongwith the monkeys, comes near Lanka to kill Rāvaṇa. (20) Rāvaṇa will send you to Rāma as his emissary. Seeing Rāma you will be freed from the curse and teaching Rāvaṇa the true knowledge you will be liberated and attain the supreme abode. Having been so said by Agastya, Śuka, the best among the Brāhmaṇas became Rākṣasa instantly and approaching Rāvaṇa he stayed there. Now as an envoy he saw Rāma with his brother, taught the true knowledge to Rāvaṇa and was quickly transformed into his original Brāhmaṇa form and lived with the Vaikhānasas. (21—24)

Then arrived the great Mālyāvān, the seniormost among the Rākṣasas, the maternal grandfather of Rāvaṇa, who was talented and expert in polity. (25) He said to Rāvaṇa with most placid mind—"O king, listen to me today and act as you please." (26) Since Jānakī, the spouse of Rāma, has entered the town (Lanka), from that very moment the bad omen appear in this town which indicate a great harm (if not complete destruction). I am narrating them, please listen—The clouds thunder with terrible harshness. (27-28) They always shower blood which is warm. The images of deities weep, perspire and even slip from their positions. (29) Kālikā laughs with her yellow teeth in front of the Rākṣasas. Cows give birth to donkeys. The mice fight with the cats and mongoose and snakes fight with Garuḍa. An extremely dreadful Kālapuruṣa (personation of death) with black and yellow hue, horrifying face and clean shaved looks at the houses of the Rākṣasas from time to time. These and many more bad omens appear and are often seen. (30—32) Therefore perform some religious rites to subside them and protect the family. Having Sītā properly adored and with the plenty of riches return to Rāma immediately. (33) Take it that Rāma is Nārāyaṇa; give up enmity for him. Boarding the ship of His feet the wise ones whose heart has been sanctified with devotion, cross the ocean of the world. Rāma is not human being. Adore with devotion Śrī Rāma who abides in every heart. (34-35) Although your conduct is wicked and irreligious yet you will be purified with his devotion. O Rājendra, follow my advice for the wellbeing of Rākṣasa dynasty. (36)

Rāvaṇa overruled the benedictory advice of Mālyavān and the wicked fellow under the sway of death as he was, said. (37) In what way do you suppose Rāma to be capable of something. He is simply a poor human being, quite forlorn, alone, with the only support of monkeys, discarded by his father. He is a darling of only forest dwelling Munis. (38)

It appears that you are sent by Rāma talking irrelevant and incoherent things. Get out. You are old and are a relative therefore I tolerated what you said. (39) These words of yours are burning my ears. So saying he followed by his ministers left the place and sitting on the top floor of the mansion, watching the monkey soldiers started deputing all the Rākṣasas present there, for the battle. (40-41)

This side Rāma also took the bow brought by Lakṣmaṇa, infuriated with anger to see Rāvaṇa sitting, the diadems on his heads, surrounded by the ministers, put a crescent shaped arrow (on the string) and with that single arrow cut the thousands of white umbrellas and ten diadems within half a moment. It was something very strange. (42—44) Rāvaṇa, quite ashamed quickly entered into his palace and called for Prahasta and other main figures among the Rākṣasas and ordered them to start war immediately against the monkeys. Then (sounded) Bherī, Mṛdaṅga, Paṇava, Ānaka and Gomukha (all, musical instruments of war). (45-46) Mounting on bull buffaloes, camels, asses, lions and tigers equipped with daggers, lances, bows, nooses sticks, Tomara and Śakti etc., came to every gate of Lanka. The big monkeys already inspired by Rāma took the rocks and mountain peaks, they uprooted various trees looking at the army of Rāvaṇa divided in groups invaded Lanka to accomplish the desired object of Rāma. (47—50) Those monkeys—some of them commanded one thousand soldiers and some commanded crores while some other commanded one hundred crores—jumping (into the sky) leaping (on the ground) holding trees and rocks, besieged the town from all sides. (51-52) Hail to Rāma of super might; hail to exceptionally strong Lakṣmaṇa; hail to the king Sugrīva protected by Śrī Rāma. (53) Raising such slogans they fought with the enemies. Hanumān, Aṅgada, Kumuda, Nīla, Nala, Śarabha, Mainda, Dwiwida, Jāmbavān, Dadhimukha, Kesarī, Tāra and many more chief monkeys jumped and blocked from all sides every gate of Lanka. Then the huge bodied monkeys hit the Rākṣasas forcefully with trees, rocks, nails and teeth. The dreadful huge-bodied and mighty Rākṣasas on the other hand came out from all the doors and charged the monkey army with javelin, spear and axes etc. (54—58) And the victorious monkeys made a counter attack against the Rākṣasas. Then due to the fierce fighting the battlefield turned into a mass of flesh and blood. (59) The battle between Rākṣasas and monkeys appeared to have no match of its own. The Rākṣasa warriors mounting on horses, elephants and golden chariots reverberating all quarters with their sounds fought fiercely. Both the parties—the Rākṣasas and monkeys were trying to overpower each other. (60-61) The monkeys hit the Rākṣasas and the Rākṣasas hit the monkeys. When Rāma as Viṣṇu cast an eye upon the monkeys they, being born of divine aspect became instantly stronger as if they had sipped nectar. And on the other hand the Rākṣasas protected by Rāvaṇa were weakened; their charm, their might everything diminished to a great extent on account of the sin e.g., touching Sītā, of Rāvaṇa. Such Rākṣasas were forcefully struck by the monkeys. The Rākṣasa army was reduced to only one fourth remaining alive. (62—64)

The wicked Meghanāda when saw his army being destroyed that brave Rākṣasa disappeared due to the power bestowed by Brahmā. (65) He was expert in handling all the weapons. He rose to sky and using Brahmāstra and other weapons of various types tormenting the monkey army showered innumerable arrows. It was something unique and strange that even Rāma who was the best among the knowers of weaponry was (momentarily stunned) showing his respect to Brahmāstra. (66—67) He kept quiet for a moment and simply witnessed his army being killed and then the best among the Raghus was burst into conflagration like fire. (68) Rāma said to Lakṣmaṇa—"Get my bow and O best among the Raghus, watch my power today. I will burn this Rākṣasa to ashes with my Brahmāstra. (69)

Meghanāda also heard carefully the utterances of Rāma and the conjurer Rākṣasa through his Māyā swiftly went to the town. (70) Seeing the monkey army fallen Rāma was greatly pained and asked Hanumān—"Quickly go to the milky ocean. There is a mountain Droṇa by name where divine herbs are grown. O wise one, fetch it soon and enliven the army of valorous monkeys. By that you will earn permanent and eternal fame." As you order please" so saying the delighter of wind-god went immediately. (71—73) He brought the mountain. That best among the monkeys, Hanumān enlivened the army and put the mountain again in its original position and swiftly came back. (74) When Rāvaṇa heard the usual dreadful roar from the monkey army, he was amazed and said—(75)

"Rāma is the great enemy of mine. The providence has sent him here. Let my commanders and army march forward to kill him at once. (76) My ministers, their relatives and other brave persons who had inclination to do favour to me, all of them must immediately proceed for battle under my instructions and those cowards who disobey my orders and do not go to the battlefield lest they might be killed, will decidedly be killed by me. (77-78) Hearing that all were frightened and went out all who were expert in military warfare like Atikāya, Prahasta,

Mahānāda, Mahodara, Devaśatru, Nikumbha, Devāntaka, Narāntaka and many more to fight with the monkeys. (79-80) These and many other braves, proud of their strength, in hundreds and thousands entered into the monkey army and churned it. (81) They hit the monkey chiefs with missiles, Javelines, arrows, axes and other various weapons. (82) (The monkeys on the other hand) killed all Rākṣasa chiefs with trees, mountain rocks, nails, teeth and fists. (83) Some were killed by Rāma. Some by Sugrīva, the others by Hanumān, Aṅgada and Mahātmā Lakṣmaṇa. In this way all the Rākṣasas were killed by monkey chiefs. (84) Injected with the Rāma's valour the monkeys got stronger as such a power was not possible to those who were deprived of Rāma's strength. (85) Lord Rāma is the super lord, all-pervasive, all-controlling, ever-consciousness and joy personified yet since he adopted human coil through his Māyā so he was following the human norms and was doing the act of fighting etc. In reality it was only his sportive Māyā. Srī Mahādeva said—When Rāvaṇa heard that his army led by Atikāya was annihilated he became distressed and overpowered by deep anger. (1) Then the resplendent Rākṣasa, Rāvaṇa deputed Indrajit on the guard of Lanka and himself went to fight out Rāma. (2) The mighty Rāvaṇa mounted on a glorious chariot that was loaded with all sorts of weapons, attacked Rāma only. (3) He killed a number of monkeys with his arrows like poisonous snakes and felled the chieftains like Sugrīva also. (4) He saw in the battle mighty Vibhīṣaṇa with a mace in his hand, he threw the Mahāśakti (powerful lance) given by Maya on Vibhīṣaṇa. (5) Lakṣmaṇa saw that Śakti which could have killed Vibhīṣaṇa, coming towards him, thought in his mind that Rāma has granted security to this Rākṣasa and so he should not be killed at any cost. Saying so he took his mighty bow and stood in front of Vibhīṣaṇa unshakable like a mountain. (6-7) Because that Śakti and its power were infallible so it pierced through the body of Lakṣmaṇa. Whatever Śaktis, product of Māyā are there in the world, could not have any effect on high-souled Lakṣmaṇa, the partial incarnation of Śeṣanāga, who was on his turn an aspect of Lord Viṣṇu, the base and substratum of Māyā (8-9) Yet since he assumed human guise so he was following the human norms and he acted like in swoon and fell on the ground. Then Rāvaṇa tried to lift him but failed. That was a big surprise for him. How could an insignificant Rākṣasa lift up the Virāja Paramātmā who was the very essence of the entire universe and its base and substratum, the Lord Viṣṇu in person? Hanumān saw that Rāvaṇa was trying to take away Lakṣmaṇa. (10—12) The furious Hanumān struck on his chest with his fist like thunderbolt. With that stroke of fist Rāvaṇa knelt down on the ground. (13) There was a profuse bleeding through his mouth, eyes and ears. His eyes were reeling and he sat in the back portion of the chariot. (14)

Now Hanumān lifted Lakṣmaṇa injured by Rāvaṇa in his arms and carried him near Rāma. (15) Even though unborn and the Guru of Gurus the supreme lord became weightless due to the affectionate devotion of Hanumān. (16) Knowing that he has been born of a fraction of Nārāyaṇa, that Śakti also left him and came back to the chariot of Rāvaṇa. Rāvaṇa attacked Rāma. Rāma also cast an angry eye on him. The Lord of the universe mounted on the mighty Hanumān and seeing Rāvaṇa sitting in the chariot attacked him with full force. (17—19) Rāma made a great uproar by pulling the string of his bow, the sound was capable of breaking even a thunderbolt and then Rāma spoke to Rāvaṇa in a very serious tone—"O wretched of the Rākṣasas stay before me. Where will you go after doing wrong to me who am equanimous for all. (20-21) Stay before my eyes and I will kill you with the arrow that killed all your Rākṣasas in Janasthāna. (22) Hearing the words of Śrī Rāma Rāvaṇa hit Hanumān with sharpened arrows while he was carrying Śrī Rāma in the battlefield. (23) Even though the son of the wind was hit by sharp arrows yet his resplendence multiplied and the great monkey roared. (24) When Rāma saw Hanumān full of wounds he got furious like another Kālarudra. He killed the horses and the charioteer, broke his chariot, the flag, his armaments, his bow, his umbrella, the flag staff swiftly with the sharp arrows. Then Rāma hit Rāvaṇa with a great arrow like thunderbolt as Indra hit the mountains. (25—27) Hit by the Rāma's arrow the brave Rāvaṇa was shaken and lost his senses. His bow slipped from his hand. Seeing him in that condition Rāma took an Ardhacandra (crescent shaped arrow) and with that cut his diadem resplendent like sun and said—"You are seriously wounded by my arrow.

Go home. I permit you. (28-29) Entering Lanka take rest and come tomorrow and see my power." Struck by Rāma's arrow Rāvaṇa with his injured pride and greatly ashamed immediately entered Lanka. Rāma also saw Lakṣmaṇa in a swoon lying on the ground. (30-31) Human guise as he assumed, Rāma sportively acted as he was grieved very much. Then he said to Hanumān "My child, bring Lakṣmaṇa back to life and the monkeys also as you previously did by bringing the great medicines." "As you say" Hanumān said and the great monkey immediately went as instructed by Rāma. (32-33)

Hanumān with the force of wind crossed the great ocean in a moment. In the mean time the scouts of Rāvaṇa informed him. (34) "O Lord, Rāma has dispatched Hanumān to the milky ocean to get the medicine to enliven Lakṣmaṇa again." (35) Hearing the report of the scout Rāvaṇa was worried and thought for a moment. And then he alone went to the house of Kālanemi immediately during the night. (36) When Kālanemi saw Rāvaṇa arrived there in his house he was taken aback and was afraid. He said with his hands folded after offering ablutions etc., and standing before Rāvaṇa. (37) "What should I do for you O king? What is the cause of your arrival?" Then the sorrowful Rāvaṇa made a reply to Kālanemi. (38) Some crisis has developed before me caused by Kāla (the time element). I struck Lakṣmaṇa with the lance and that brave fellow fell on the ground. (39) To bring him back to life Hanumān has gone to get the medicine. Do something that may positively create obstruction in his mission. (40) Make a guise of Muni through Māyā and mislead him, so that the action be delayed and the time be passed. Only after doing this come to the house. (41) Hearing Rāvaṇa's words Kālanemi said to him—O lord Rāvaṇa listen to what I say and assimilate its essence. (42) I will definitely do what you like. I will not care even for my life. What happened to Mārīca when he adopted a form of the deer in the forest back in the past, will certainly take place with me; there is no doubt, O ten-faced one. Many of your sons, grandsons and relative Rākṣasas have been killed in the battle. (43-44) After getting the Rākṣasa dynasty annihilated what is the use of your life, of kingdom, of Sītā or even your inert body? (45) Surrender Sītā to Rāma, coronate Vibhīṣaṇa on the throne and go to the forest, the fine abode for the Munis. them from outside. (48) Take the Ātmā to be different from Prakṛti O sinless one. Take it for granted that the entire mobile and immobile world with body, intellect and senses etc., right from Brahmā to the Stamba (a cluster of grass) whatever is the subject of audition and vision is Prakṛti and same is said to be Māyā. (49-50) The same Prakṛti or Māyā is the cause of creation, maintenance and destruction of world-tree. It always creates being of red, white and black hue (of Rājasika, Sāttvika and Tāmasika nature). The same Māyā through its Guṇas allures the all-pervasive Ātmā and gives birth to the sons like lust and anger (Kāma and Krodha) and daughters like Himsā, Trṣṇā etc. (51-52) She (Māyā) superimposes on the Lord (Ātmā) her own qualities of doership and enjoyership, bringing Him under her control always plays with him. (53) Being associated with Māyā the Ātmā misled by the qualities of Māyā forgets his own real nature and even though he is always unalloyedly pure still always looks for sense-objects (outside in the world). (55) Then the Jīva becomes Jivanamukta and is dissociated from the qualities of Prakṛti. Do you also have control over your senses and contemplate on the real form of Ātmā that is you. be liberated. If you are incapable of such meditation, take shelter of the God with attributes. (57) (Meditate that) In the pericarp of the lotus of your heart, on a golden plank studded with rubies that is soft in touch and brightly clear, Rāma is sitting with Jānakī. (58) He is in the pose of Virāsana. His eyes are big and garment like a heap of lightning flash. He is bedecked with diadem, garland, Keyūra and Kaustubha etc. (59) He is resplendent with Nūpura, Kaṭaka and wild garland. Lakṣmaṇa is attending on him with two bows in his two hands. (60) Always think that Rāma abiding in every heart is your own self. This way with such type of supreme devotion you will get salvation undoubtedly. (61) Listen his sportive stories from his devotees, with an undivided mind. Doing so even the great sins committed in the past will be destroyed within no time just as fire destroys the cotton heap. (62) Rāma is all-pervasive and one without the second. Giving up enmity, inculcating your devotion to him who is without name and form, the ancient person, adore him always meditating his attributed form in your heart. (63)

Srī Mahādeva said—Hearing nectar-like words of Kālanemi Rāvaṇa burst into conflagration with fury as if the water was sprinkled in heated ghee. (1) You dare to disobey my command. I will instantly kill you. Seems that you have been bribed and talk like a slave of Rāma. (2) Kālanemi made a reply—"O lord Rāvaṇa, no use of anger. If you do not like what I said, I will do what you ordered." (3) Saying so the great Rākṣasa Kālanemi immediately went to put obstacles in the path of Hanumān, as instructed by Rāvaṇa. (4) Reaching near Himalaya he created a Tapovana (grove where penance is practised). There the wicked fellow assumed the guise of a Muni and was surrounded by a number of his disciples and (made this establishment) in the probable path of Hanumān, the son of wind-god. On his mission Hanumān saw this Āśrama. (5-6) The resplendent Hanumān mentally debated—Last time I saw no such hermitage inhabited by Munis. (7) Is it that I have lost my way or is it the projection of mind. Anyway (be whatever it is) let me enter the Āśrama and have the vision of the Munis. (8) I will drink some water and then proceed to Dronācala, the

It was full of trees like banana, Śāla, fig and Panasa etc., with their branches coming down laden with ripe fruits. (9-10) That sanctified and clean Āśrama was completely bereft of animus feelings. In that Āśrama the Rākṣasa Kālanemi deceitfully worshipped Śivaliṅga (a conjured one). Hanumān paid his obeisance with great respect and said to the great Rākṣasa. (11-12) O lord, I am the envoy of Lord Rāma. Hanumān is my name. I am on a great mission for Rāma and want to go to the milky ocean. (13) I am thirsty O Brahman. Tell me where I can find water. I want to drink plenty of it. (14)

Get some sleep and make no haste. (16) I know the past, present and future on the strength of my penances. Lakṣmaṇa alongwith all the monkeys have come to senses with a glance of Rāma. Hanumān entered into the pond and was drinking water with the closed eyes. (21) Then there came a female crocodile through Māyā and she of the dreadful shape and size swiftly started swallowing Hanumān. (22) Then Hanumān looked at the crocodile with anger who was swallowing him and he tore apart her mouth with his hands and she died. (23) Just after that a most beautiful and divinely shaped woman appeared in the sky. She was known as Dhānyamālī. She told Hanumān "O lord of the monkeys, by your grace I am released from the curse. Formerly I was a nymph and for certain reason a Muni cursed me. (And I was transformed into a crocodile). Seeing Hanumān arrived, Kālanemi spoke—there is no sense in making delay O best among the monkeys. (29) Come. Receive Mantra and pay the preceptorial fee to me. Having been so said Hanumān clinched his fist strongly and told the Rākṣasa—(30) "Take this fee." So saying he hit him. Then abandoning his disguise the mighty Rākṣasa Kālanemi fought with Hanumān adopting various devices of Māyā. But then Hanumān was the envoy of Rāma, the conjurer of conjurers (the lord of the Māyā) and the bitter enemy of the conjuring demons. (31-32) He hit him with the fist on his head which broke apart and he died. Thereafter he reached the milky ocean, he saw the Droṇa mountain but failed to see the herbs. He then instantly uprooted the mountain, took it and sped with the force of the wind, went near Rāma and reported to him—"the great mountain has been brought here O lord. Now do the needful. No delay should be made." (33-35) The wise Rāma fully satisfied after hearing what Hanumān said, took the medicines and got Mahātmā Lakṣmaṇa medically treated by Suṣeṇa. Lakṣmaṇa came to his normal self as if he woke up from a sleep and said. (36-37)

"Stop, Stop. Where are you going? I will just kill you O Rāvaṇa." While Lakṣmaṇa was so saying Rāma (took him in embrace) smelt him on head and addressed Hanumān—O great monkey, my child, it is merely by your grace that I am seeing brother Lakṣmaṇa hale and hearty. (38-39) Having so said, alongwith the monkeys accompanied by Sugrīva on the advice of Vibhīṣaṇa Rāma started for battle. The monkeys holding stones, trees and mountain peaks in their hands, all eager to fight, fully prepared for battle, went. (40-41) On the otherside Rāvaṇa wounded by the arrows of Rāma was greatly pained like an elephant wounded by lion or a snake wounded by Garuḍa. The king Rāvaṇa, defeated by the great-souled Rāma went (back to Lanka). Seated on the throne he spoke to the Rākṣasas. (42-43) In the past Pitāmaha Brahmā predicted my death at the hands of a human being but on the whole earth there is no human being capable of killing me. (44) Therefore that Nārāyaṇa himself has appeared in the form of a man that is Rāma, the son of Daśaratha and has come to kill me. (45) In the past, Anaraṇya cursed me—'O lord of the Rākṣasas' in my clan the eternal Paramātmā will take birth. He will kill you alongwith your sons, grandsons and relatives; there is no doubt. So saying he went to heaven. (46-47) It is that very Rāma who took birth to kill me and he will kill me. There is Kumbhakarna, the fool who sleeps always. (48) Wake up that mighty fellow and bring him in before me. So ordered, those huge bodied demons went at once and with great effort they woke Kumbhakarna and brought him to Rāvaṇa. Kumbhakarna saluted Rāvaṇa and sat on the seat. (49-50) The king Rāvaṇa told his brother

Kumbhakarna in a pitiful voice—Kumbhakarna, you should know that a great crisis has fallen. (51) Rāma has killed my brave soldiers, sons, grandsons and relatives. It seems that the time for my death has arrived. What should be done at this critical moment? (52) The mighty Rāma, son of Daśaratha alongwith Sugrīva has crossed the ocean with his entire army and is cutting my roots. (53) All leading Rākṣasas have been killed in the battle by the monkeys but I fail ever to see the destruction of monkeys. (54) Destroy them O mighty armed, for which you have been awakened. O valourous one, do this favour for the sake of your brother, although it is very difficult. (55) Hearing these pitiful words of Rāvaṇa Kumbhakarna burst into laughter and said—(56)

"O king, on the occasion of consultation in the past what I said is coming true to you in the shape of the fruit of your sins." (57) I already said that Rāma is supreme Nārāyaṇa and Sītā is Yogamāyā. But in spite of my suggestions you refused to understand. (58) One night I was sitting on a big rock in a forest when I saw the divinely looking Muni Nārada in person. (59) I asked him—O Mahābhāga, where are you going now. Please tell me. Having been so said Nārada told me—'I was in the meeting of gods for some discussion. (60) What took place there, I am going to tell you. All gods tortured by you two, had come to lord Viṣṇu. (61) With due devotion they prayed Viṣṇu, the god of gods and said—"O lord, kill the invincible Rāvaṇa, the enemy of all the three worlds. (62) His death has been designed by lord Brahmā through a human being in the past. Therefore become a human and kill this thorn-like Rāvaṇa. (63) Then Mahāviṣṇu, the overlord and Satyasaṅkalpa (whose intention never goes stray) said 'very well'. Now he has descended in Raghu dynasty known as Rāma. (64) He will kill you all. Saying so the Muni went away. Therefore you must regard Rāma as supreme Brahma and eternal. (65) Give up enmity with him and start adoring him right now who has assumed a human coil through his Māyā. Rāma, the best among the Raghus, gets propitiated if somebody adores him with devotion. (66) Bhakti is the mother of Jñāna and it is Bhakti that gives Mokṣa. Whatever is done without Bhakti, it is as good as nothing. (67) There have been so many incarnations of Lord Viṣṇu and they sported according to their form and as demanded by the occasion but the incarnation of Rāma the embodied knowledge and Śiva in person, is equal to one thousand other incarnations of previous type. (68) The wise ones adore Rāma abode of Hari by crossing the ocean of the world without much effort. (69) Those who meditate on Rāma always with purified heart and read his stories get the lotus feet of Rāma the only resource for beatific joy after getting released from the noose of the snakes in the shape of worldly enjoyment. (70)

Thus ends canto VII of Yuddhakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said— Hearing these words of Kumbhakarṇa Rāvaṇa with infuriated gesture with frowning eyebrows, almost sprang from his seat and said. (1) You are not summoned here as a wise man to preach me knowledge. If you so like go and fight accepting what I did as proper and correct. (2) If not, go and sleep. At present you are feeling drowsy and sleep is overpowering you. Hearing Rāvaṇa's words the mighty Kumbhakarṇa knew that he is angry and he (Kumbhakarṇa) went out immediately. He like a big mountain crossed the rampart and came out of the town terrifying the monkey soldiers. He roared. The sound reverberated all over the ocean. (3—5) He caught the monkeys with his arms, ate and swallowed them. Kumbhakarṇa appeared like a winged mountain and all the monkeys ran away as if they saw Kālāntaka, the god of death. When Vibhīṣaṇa saw that the mighty Kumbhakarna with a club in his hand roaming here, there and everywhere in the monkey armies, killing monkeys, eating them swiftly, kicking them with feet and punching with his fists, he approached him with a mace in his hand, bade Praṇāma in the feet of elder brother. (6-9) He said—"I am Vibhīṣaṇa. Show mercy on me e.g., your brother. I tried to convince Rāvaṇa again and again. (10) Surrender Sītā to Rāma as Rāma is Viṣṇu himself but he paid no heed at all and got ready to strike me with his sword and said—(11) Fie on you! Get out. So saying he kicked me while he was surrounded by a number of sinners. So I came under the shelter of Rāma along with the four of my ministers. (12) Hearing that Kumbhakarna took notice of his brother having come. He embraced him and said—"Live long my dear, under the protection of Rāma's feet for continuing the family chain and for the benefit of the Rākṣasas. You are a great Bhāgavata so I heard from Nārada in the past. (13-14) Now go my dear. At present being intoxicated my eyes fail to discriminate between friend and foe. (15) Having been so said adoring the brother's feet with tearful eyes greatly worried Vibhīṣaṇa presented himself before Rāma. (16) Kumbhakarna also crushing the monkeys with his hands and feet like an intoxicated elephant and killing them moved around the monkey army. (17) Seeing him Rāma became furious and took the missile presided by wind-god and shot it at Kumbhakarna. Through that arrow he cut the right hand of the Rākṣasa in which there was the club. It caused Kumbhakarna to make a dreadful roar. That arm of his fell on the ground crushing a number of monkeys (18-19). All other monkeys horrified with fear, standing away watched the fighting between Rāma and Kumbhakarna. (20) Kumbhakarna with his right hand cut apart, took a Śāla tree and attacked Rāma forcefully with the intention to kill him. Rāma on his part took another weapon presided by Indra that cut his left hand holding Śāla also. (Still even though both of his hands were cut, he did not stop.) Rāma saw him charging even without arms. He took two Ardhacandra (crescent shaped) arrows and cut both of his legs. The two legs fell at the gate of Lanka making big sound. (21-23) With arms and feet cut Kumbhakarna looked more dreadful opening his mouth like that of a mare rushed at Rāma just like Rāhu rushes towards Candramā and roared. And Rāma filled his open mouth with sharp arrows. (24-25) Kumbhakarna, his mouth filled with arrows, shrieked frighteningly. Now Rāma took the powerful arrow of Indra equal to Sun in its resplendence and Vajra in its striking impact. He shot it for killing the Rākṣasa. That arrow cut the head of the Rākṣasa Kumbhakarna that was luminous due to his bright ear-rings and white teeth, big like a mountain just as Indra cut the head of Vṛtrāsura with his bolt. That head fell at the

Then Nārada arrived to see Rāma from the sky illuminating all the quarters with his resplendence. (31) Nārada started praising Rāma in a voice choked with devotion, Rāma whose bodily hue was just like blue lotus, who was most handsome with the eyes big and slightly red holding bow and the weapon of Indra in his hand who cast a merciful eye on the monkeys wounded with arrows. (32-33)

Nārada said—My obeisance to you, O god of gods, O lord of the universe, Paramātmā, eternal, Nārāyaṇa, substratum of all, spectator of the universe. (34) You are pure knowledge embodied yet only for deluding the worldly people, You have assumed the human coil with your Māyā and You appear happy and sad like ordinary persons. (35) You yourself seemingly enveloped in your own Māyā, as indweller abide in every heart. You are self luminous and You manifest yourself before persons of purified heart. (36) By opening your eyes you create the three worlds and withdraw them through closing the eyes. (37) My obeisance to you the supreme Brahma in which appear the universe and from which originate the beings mobile and immobile, apart and different from which, there is nothing in the world. (38) My obeisance to you O Rāma, whom the best of Munis consider as Prakṛti, Puruṣa, Kāla and the reality which is manifest and unmanifest both. (39) The Vedas describe you as pure, knowledge embodied, devoid of all mutations and at the same time the same Vedas refer to you to be manifested in the form of the universe. (40) O lord, this way there appear contradictory statements in the Vedas for those who are expert in Vedic lores and even though the wise ones fail to come to the real conclusion without your grace. (41) As you are playing sports through your Māyā so there is no contradiction at all. Just as the sunbeams are misconceived as water (in certain conditions) similarly due to the delusive notions the universe seems to appear in you. O lord, your attributeless form, the supreme is beyond the reach of mind. (42-43) That attributeless form is beyond the purview of the sense-organs and in the absence of visualisation how can one adore that form? This is why the intelligent and wise people only adore your incarnated forms and cross the ocean of the world. But (in the path of devotion) lust and anger etc., are the numerous enemies. They always frighten the mind just like the cats terrorise mice. But to those who always remember your name, meditate on your form, who are always engaged in your

Pūjā or always drink the nectar of your stories and those who attend always the company of your devotees, this world shrinks to the size of the hoof of a cow. (44—47) Therefore by meditating on your attributed form I roam completely free among all the three worlds and command respect from even gods. (48) Rāma, you have done a tremendous job with the intention to do good to the heavenly deities by killing Kumbhakarna. Today a great burden of earth has been removed. Tomorrow Lakṣmaṇa will kill Indrajit in the battle and you will kill Rāvaṇa the day after. (49-50) O lord I will witness all this alongwith the Siddhas from the sky. Be merciful on me. I will now go to the paradise. (51) Having so said and taking permission from Rāma the divine sage Nārada went to Brahmaloka, bereft of all sins acknowledging the adorations of gods. (52)

(On the otherside) Rāvaṇa was engulfed by sorrow when he heard that Rāma for whom there is no job difficult, has killed his brother, the mighty Kumbhakarna. (53) He swooned and fell on the ground and after regaining his senses wept and cried. Indrajit when heard the demise of his uncle and knew that his father was distressed he submitted to his grieving father—'Leave this grief sire, O Rājendra, O killer of gods, the wisest, while I, the mighty Meghanāda, am alive there should be no occasion for such sorrow. There I will satiate the fire-god through sacrifice, obtain from him chariot etc., and become invincible for the enemies' So saying he immediately went to that particular sacrificing canopy. (57-58) He was in a red garment with red garland in his neck, smeared with red Candana. In the place of Nikumbhilā he started pouring oblations observing complete silence. (59) Thereafter receiving that news about the efforts of Meghanāda Vibhīṣaṇa went to Rāma and reported everything regarding the sacrifice by that wicked fellow. (60) Vibhīṣaṇa said—If this sacrifice of evil-minded Meghanāda is accomplished, he will be invincible for all O Rāma including all gods and demons. (61) So I will get Meghanāda killed by Lakṣmaṇa very soon. So permit Lakṣmaṇa the best among the braves with me. Your younger brother will kill Meghanāda there is no doubt. (62)

Śrī Rāmacandra said— I myself will come to kill the enemy Indrajit with my fiery weapon (Āgneyāstra) capable of killing all the demons. (63) Vibhīṣaṇa said to him—"He cannot be killed by others. Brahmā has decided the death of this wretched by that person who lived for twelve years without sleep and food. Lakṣmaṇa, since he left Ayodhya and came alongwith you, has left sleeping and eating O best among the Raghus. I have gathered these informations as a token of service to you. (64—66) So, soon accord permission to Lakṣmaṇa to go with me. He is Śeṣa in person, holder of the earth. He will certainly kill him. (67) You yourself are the overlord of the universe, Nārāyaṇa, Lakṣmaṇa is Śeṣa. You both are the puppet-masters in this drama of the world and have taken birth to unburden the earth. (68)

Śrī Mahādeva said—Hearing the words of Vibhīṣaṇa, Rāma said—O Vibhīṣaṇa, I know the Māyā of that terrific demon. (1) He holds Brahmāstra, he is strong and a conjurer. I know the real nature and form of Lakṣmaṇa also. I know how he serves me. (2) Even knowing all this, particularly the difficult nature of task, I kept silent. Saying so, Rāma, the wisest among the wise said to Lakṣmaṇa. (3) Lakṣmaṇa, go alongwith a big army, all the chiefs led by Hanumān and kill Meghanāda. This Jāmbavān, the king of the bears followed by his army and Vibhīṣaṇa with his ministers will follow you. (5) He is familiar of the locality and knows about all the caves. Hearing Rāma's words the valorous Lakṣmaṇa took his another bow a very strong and best one. He got up with Vibhīṣaṇa touched the lotus feet of Rāma and spoke cheerfully. (6-7) Today my arrows shot from my bow will pierce through the body of Meghanāda and go to Pātāla to have a dip in the waters of Bhogavatī. So saying Lakṣmaṇa, the man of speedy valour, circumambulated and saluted Rāma and went out with the intention to kill Meghanāda. (8-9) Hanumān alongwith several thousands of his army, followed him and also Vibhīṣaṇa with his ministers at once started. (10) The bears headed by Jāmbavān followed Lakṣmaṇa immediately. Reaching the vicinity of Nikumbhilā Lakṣmaṇa and the monkeys saw the gathering of Rākṣasa army from a considerable distance. Seeing that the splendidly valorous Lakṣmaṇa strung his bow and became alert and so were Jāmbavān, Vibhīṣaṇa and the brave Aṅgada. Then Vibhīṣaṇa said to Lakṣmaṇa—"Have a look at the Rākṣasas. (11—13) Make effort to destroy this Rākṣasa army looking like black cloud. (14) You will see the son of the Rākṣasa king e.g.,

Meghanāda but only after this army is destroyed. So charge immediately before the sacrifice is completed. (15) O brave, kill this wicked fellow who is given to Himsā and is very irreligious. Hearing Vibhīṣaṇa's words Lakṣmaṇa with all the auspicious characteristics showered arrows on the son of the Rākṣasa king. The monkeys also hit the demon from all sides with stones, rocks and trees. The demons also hit the monkey chiefs, with axes, sharp arrows, swords, sticks and Tomaras. That produced a great uproar. There appeared between monkeys and demons attacks and counter attacks—a great uproarious battle. (16—19) Indrajit seeing his army being destroyed left Nikumbhilā and the Havana also and quickly came out. (20) He took his bow, mounted on a chariot, greatly infuriated, came to the battlefield and challenged Lakṣmaṇa. (21)

Lakṣmaṇa! I am Meghanāda. You cannot escape alive from me. Then his eyes fell on his uncle Vibhīṣaṇa and he said with all the harshness. (22) You are born here in Lanka and grew up. You are the real brother of my father. Fie, that abandoning your people you have accepted slavery of the enemies. Why do you feel enmity with me, your son? You are a sinner and evil-minded. Saying so he saw Lakṣmaṇa mounted on the back of Hanumān. (23-24) He was sitting in a big chariot fully equipped with sharp weapons. He took a very big bow, strung it and by pulling the string he created a terrible noise. (25) He said—

 "O monkeys, today my arrows will drink your Prāṇa (life energy). Then Lakṣmaṇa, the scorcher of the foes, angrily hissing like a snake took an arrow, put it on the string and shot it towards Meghanāda. Meghanāda on his turn looked at Lakṣmaṇa with red eyes. (26-27) Having been struck by Lakṣmaṇa's arrows which were like Vajra of Indra, Indrajit became unconscious for a moment. But very soon he regained consciousness. (28) He saw the brave Lakṣmaṇa, the son of Daśaratha, standing (in the battlefield). His eyes reddened with anger, he attacked Lakṣmaṇa. Putting arrows on the bow he said to Lakṣmaṇa—"If you did not see my valour in the previous battle, today I will show you. Be steadfast and stand" saying so he shot Lakṣmaṇa with seven arrows. (29-31) He hit Hanumān with ten very sharp arrows and with double zeal due to enhanced anger the valorous Meghanāda pierced Vibhīṣaṇa with one hundred arrows. Lakṣmaṇa also on his part made a shower of arrows on him. (32-33) His sharp arrows cut the golden armour of Meghanāda into innumerable small pieces and it fell down in the back portion of the chariot. (34) Then the angry son of Rāvaṇa hit the brave Lakṣmaṇa in the field with one thousand arrows. (35) The divine armour of Lakṣmaṇa also was cut into pieces and fell down. So was the attack and counter attack between the two warriors and both of them fought with each other. (36) Both of them breathed heavily again and again and the horrible fight both of them fought. Both had their bodily limbs seriously wounded and besmeared with blood. (37) For a pretty long time both the braves fought with sharp arrows. Both were splendidly mighty and both could neither be defeated nor be winners. (38) In the meantime the brave Lakṣmaṇa through five arrows killed the charioteer and horses of Meghanāda and broke the chariot to pieces. (39) Exhibiting the swiftness of his hand cut his bow also. Meghanāda took another bow a good one and swiftly stringed it. Again Lakṣmaṇa with three swiftly shot arrows cut that bow also. While he was holding his broken bow, Lakṣmaṇa hit him with numerous arrows. (40-41) Meghanāda, of the terrific prowess took another bow again and wounded seriously Lakṣmaṇa and all the monkeys with the arrows sharp and shining like sun. He filled all the quarters with his arrows. Then Lakṣmaṇa took the weapon of Indra for Meghanāda. (42-43) Put the arrow on the bow strong and hard, pulling the string unto his ear, the brave Lakṣmaṇa remembering the lotus feet of Rāma spoke—(44) If Rāma, the son of Daśaratha, is religious, righteous and truthful; if Rāma is without a match in all the three worlds, then kill this Meghanāda. (45) Having so said the brave Lakṣmaṇa pulled that straight going arrow, unto the ear in the battlefield, shot Indrajit with it. (46) That arrow cut the head of Meghanāda which was brightened by his earrings, alongwith the helmet and felled on the ground from the body. (47) Then the happy gods eulogising Lakṣmaṇa, showered flowers and praised him again and again. (48) Lord Indra also became happy alongwith the gods and great sages. In the sky also the sound of heavenly drums (Dundubhi) was heard. (49) The sky was clean and the earth that holds the universe became steady to see Meghanāda killed. The omnipresent Lakṣmaṇa was hailed and praised. (50) Having been defatigued Lakṣmaṇa blew his conch and filled the battlefield with its sound. Immediately after he roared like a lion and made a terrific sound of his bow string. (51)

That sound cheered the monkeys and refreshed them. Lakṣmaṇa fully satisfied, being eulogised by the monkeys and accompanied with them and with Hanumān and Vibhīṣaṇa came back to Rāma and had his Darśana. Then with all humility he adored Śrī Rāma, his elder brother, the omnipresent Nārāyaṇa Himself and said—"O the best among the Raghus, by your grace Meghanāda is killed in the battle". (52-54) After hearing the news Rāma embraced Lakṣmaṇa with great affection, smelt on his head. The cheerful Rāma spoke affectionately. (55) Well done Lakṣmaṇa. I am happy, you have done a difficult job. Having been Meghanāda killed everybody else is already conquered, O subduer of the enemy. (56) After a fierce fight—three consecutive day and nights, somehow the brave Meghanāda you have killed. Today I am rendered without enemy. Now Rāvaṇa will come out for battle, grief stricken by demise of his son, to fight me and I will kill him. (57-58)

When Rāvaṇa heard that Meghanāda was killed by Lakṣmaṇa he swooned and fell on the ground. After sometime he got consciousness and started weeping most pitifully due to the grief caused by the death of his son. (59) He repeatedly remembered the qualities and exploits of his son and wept. Today the gods, the Lokapālas, the sages will sleep peacefully and fearlessly knowing that Indrajit has been killed. Many such more utterances he made due to the attachment to his son and wept. (60-61) After that the highly furious Rāvaṇa, the Rākṣasa king, said to all the Rākṣasas with a desire to perpetrate complete destruction in the battle. (62) Thereafter the brave Rāvaṇa, scorched by the demise of his son, was infuriated. He decided something in his mind and rushed to kill Sītā. (63) Sītā surrounded by the demonesses saw Rāvaṇa coming infuriated and with sword in his hand and she was frightened and overpowered by grief. (64) Just at the time Rāvaṇa's minister, a wise, pure hearted and talented one named Supārśwa said to Rāvaṇa. (65) O Rāvaṇa, horrible. You are the younger brother of Kubera himself. You are expert in vedic lores, you have observed several vows and are dedicated to your own duty. (66) You possess a number of good qualities. How is it so that you are prepared to kill a woman. Wait and accompanied by us, kill Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa in the battle and certainly you will get Jānakī very soon. Having been so said he turned back. (67) The wicked Rāvaṇa accepted the rightful words of his well-wisher, went to his palace, still plunged in grief. Thereafter the fool surrounded by his well-wishers went to his court. (68)

hit by the sharp arrows of Rāma on his chest was extremely pained and immediately entered into Lanka. (3) Rāvaṇa witnessing again and again the super human valour of Rāma and Haṇumān went hurriedly to Śukrācārya. (4) He saluted him and requested with folded hands—O lord, even though a Sadguru like you is bodily present yet Rāma destroyed Lanka, killed the great demons alongwith their chiefs, killed the sons and relatives of mine. Why am I suffering so much in your presence? (5-6) Having been so requested the Daityācārya advised Rāvaṇa— "Perform carefully a sacrifice in a secluded place. If there occur no obstacles then after its completion a great chariot, the horses, bow, quiver and arrows will come out of the sacrificial fire. Equipped with these you will be invincible. (7-9) I will initiate you in the Mantra. Take it. Go and perform the Homa as soon as possible." Having been so advised the Rākṣasa king Rāvaṇa made swiftly a cave like Pātāla in his own palace and barricaded carefully all the gates and doors of Lanka. (10-11) He gathered all necessary materials prescribed for black magic and entered the cave. He started Homa in that secluded place observing complete silence. (12)

Vibhīṣaṇa saw the rings of smoke rising profusely. The afraid Vibhīṣaṇa showed that smoke to Rāma and said. (13)

O Rāma, look there. Rāvaṇa has started performing Homa. If this Homa completes (unobstructed) he cannot be conquered. (14) Therefore, despatch immediately the monkey chiefs to create obstacles in the process of Homa. "Very well" Rāma said and with the advice of Sugrīva instructed his valorous braves like Aṅgada and Hanumān (for that). They crossed the ramparts and reached the palace of Rāvaṇa. (15-16) Ten crores of monkeys were there who crushed the guards of the palace and killed the horses and elephants within no time. (17) Very early in the morning Saramā, the wife of Vibhīṣaṇa indicated the place of Homa with her hand. (18) The mighty Aṅgada broke the rocky door-leaf with his kicks and entered the big cave. (19) He saw there Rāvaṇa sitting in a firm pose with eyes closed. Thereafter with the permission of Aṅgada all monkeys entered at once. (20) They beat his attendants and made a terrific uproar, threw all the paraphernalia here and there in the sacrificial fire. (21) The monkey leader Hanumān snatched forcibly the ladle from his hand and hit him with the same. The monkeys beat him from all sides with the wood pieces and their teeth. Rāvaṇa had a determination for his victory. So in spite of being repeatedly hit he did not give up his meditation. (22-23) Aṅgada with promptitude entered his gynaecium and brought the auspicious

Mandodarī holding her by her hairs. (24) Right before Rāvaṇa Mandodarī was crying like an orphan and Aṅgada tore away her blouse embroidered with gems. The pearls and other gems all were loosely scattered and her girdle made of coloured gems fell down. (25-26) Right before the eyes of Rāvaṇa her lower garment was untied and fell down from her waist region and all her ornaments scattered hither and thither. (27) The other monkeys also in their hilarious mood brought the ladies of gods and Gandharvas. Mandodarī wept and cried very much. (28) Weeping bitterly and pathetically she said to Rāvaṇa—"You are shameless. Your enemies are dragging your wife by the hair. What for are you pouring oblations not feeling ashamed? It is better for him to die whose wife is beaten by the sinful enemies before his eyes. O, Meghanāda, your mother is being tortured by monkeys. (29-31) Had you been alive I would not have suffered so much. My husband has abandoned his wife as well as the sense of shame only to save his life. (32) The king Rāvaṇa hearing the cry of Mandodarī got up with sword in his hand saying, "Leave her". (33) The unperturbed Rāvaṇa struck Aṅgada on his waist region. Then all the monkeys completely destroyed his Hawana and fled away. They reached near Rāma very cheerfully and waited there. (34-35)

Thereafter Rāvaṇa consoled Mandodarī and said "O auspicious lady, it is all under control of the destiny. A living person has got to undergo all sorts of situations. So O big eyed one, take shelter of the wisdom and grieve not. (36) Grief is a creation of ignorance and it destroys the knowledge. The identification with the non-self objects like body etc., is also due to ignorance. (37) The relations like son and wife etc., originate from the same ignorance and then comes Samsāra (birth and death). And so come the instincts like pleasure, grief, fear, anger, greed, infatuation and desire etc. (38) The birth, death and old age—all these are the product of ignorance. Ātmā is one without attributes, pure different from all other things and completely unattached. (39) It is Ānanda embodied, knowledge in person and devoid of all feelings. That existence embodied neither has union or separation with or from any object. (40) Realising yourself to be Ātmā this way give up grief O unguiled one. I am just now going and will come back soon after killing Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa or else Rāma will tear me down with his Vajra-like arrows and I will reach his abode. (41-42) In that situation do one thing as instructed by me O darling. Kill Sitā and you yourself enter the fire with me. (43)

Hearing such words of Rāvaṇa Mandodarī was extremely pained and said "O lord, listen to my truthful words and do follow them. (44) Rāghava is invincible for you or for anybody else. He is supreme God, the overlord of Prakṛti and Puruṣa both, (or else) He is Himself the Prakṛti, the Puruṣa and their ruling lord also. (45) The lover of his devotees, Rāma the lord, incarnating as fish in the previous Kalpa, protected Vaivaswata from all crises. (46) Then again He incarnated as turtle expanding upto one lakh Yojana and at the time of churning ocean he held the golden mountain on his back. (47) Then He again adopted the form of a boar and the great souled Rāma killed extremely wicked Hiranyākṣa and rescued the earth. (48) Then again He assumed his man-lion form and killed Hiranyakaśipu who was like a thorn for all the three worlds. (49) The same Rāma in the form of Vāmana measured the entire world within three strides, roaped Bali and gave the throne to Indra, his servant. (50) Thereafter when the Rākṣasa forces appeared in the form of Kṣatriyas became burdensome to the earth, Rāma appeared as Paraśurāma, killed them all and donated the earth to the Muni Kaśyapa. (51) It is the same supreme who has taken birth now in the Raghu dynasty. It is only for you that Rāma has assumed human form. (52) Why did you abduct his wife, Sītā forcibly from the forest? Was it not for getting my son killed and for your own death? (53) Hereafter even now (there is time) send Sītā to Śrī Rāma, and handover the kingdom to Vibhīṣaṇa and let us go to the forest. (54)

Hearing Mandodarī's words Rāvaṇa replied "How can I live my life in the forest after having my sons, brothers and the entire Rākṣasa dynasty killed? (It is not possible) I will go, fight with Rāma and having been torn down by his swift arrows I will go to supreme abode of Viṣṇu. I know that Rāma and Sītā are Viṣṇu and Lakṣmī. I brought Sītā purposefully from the jungle after knowing the reality. (55-57) Having been killed by Rāma I will get the supreme abode. Departing from you I will go from the world alongwith others. (58) If I am killed by Rāma in battle I will attain that supreme position full of beatific joy and absolutely pure which is always sought for by those who are desirous of salvation. (59) Having all my sins washed away I will attain salvation. I will go near Hari by crossing the ocean of the world wherein there are waves of five Kleśas; misguided knowledge is the whirlpools; wife, son, relatives, wealth and cousins are just like fishes in the ocean. One's own anger is the aquatic fire (Badavānala) and in the inner side of which there is net of lustfulness (to captivate the Jīva). (60-61)

Thus ends canto X of Yuddhakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—Having the queen Mandodarī consoled affectionately with these words Rāvaṇa set out to fight with Rāma in the battlefield. (1) Mounting on a very strong chariot with sixteen wheels, Varūtha and Kūbara, surrounded by the dreadful demons (he went out). (2) That chariot had donkeys with their mouths like Piśāca and dreadful in appearance, harnessed in it. It was loaded with all kinds of weapons and necessary materials for battle. (3) The fierce looking Rāvaṇa suddenly came out. The monkey army protected by Rāma, saw him coming. It was terrified to see him who was extremely difficult to fight against. (4-5) Hanumān leapt forward to fight with Rāvaṇa. Hanumān of incomparable valour clinched his fist strongly and punched Rāvaṇa with full force on his chest. Due to that stroke of fist Rāvaṇa fell on his knees in the chariot. (6-7) Remaining momentarily in a swoon he regained his senses and said to Hanumān—"I acknowledge you are brave." (8) Hanumān said—"Fie on me and my valour that you are still alive. Now do punch in my chest as when I will strike you again you will certainly die there is no doubt. "Very well" said Rāvaṇa and struck him with the fist on his chest. (9-10)

The eyes of Hanumān reeled and he felt dizzy. Coming to his normal self Hanumān prepared himself to hit Rāvaṇa. (11) But Rākṣasa king Rāvaṇa fled away from the front due to the fear. Then Hanumān, Aṅgada, Nala and Nīla standing together saw before them four mighty Rākṣasas named Agnivarna, Sarparomā, Khadgaromā and Vṛścikaromā. They killed the four respectively. After killing the mighty Rākṣasas all the four roared like lion and came near Rāma. (12-14)

Then the cruel and angry Rāvaṇa chewing his lips rushed towards Rāma with dilated eyes. Rāvaṇa sitting on the chariot hit Rāma with Vajra-like arrows as clouds pour down waters in terrible torrents. Not only that but he injured all the monkeys right before Rāma. (15-17) Thereafter Śrī Rāma quite alert showered over Rāvaṇa the arrows bedecked with gold and bright like fire. (18) Indra saw Rāma on the ground and Rāvaṇa on the chariot. He called for Mātali, his charioteer and said to him—"Go at once by my chariot to Rāma who is standing on the ground. Go at once to the earth and perform my mission O sinless one." (19-20) Having been so said Mātali, the charioteer of Indra, saluted him and harnessed green horses to the best of the chariots. From the heaven Mātali presented himself before Rāma, his hands folded and said "O best among the Raghus, I am sent by Indra, the king of gods. (21-22) O Lord, this chariot of Devarāja and this beautiful bow of Indra has been sent for your victory. (23) The impenetrable armour, this sword, these two divine quivers (all for your use). Mount on the chariot and kill the Rākṣasa Rāvaṇa with me as your charioteer, O Lord, just as Indra killed Vṛtra." Having been so said Rāma after making a circumambulation and salutation mounted on the chariot making all the worlds beauteous and prosperous. Thereafter there was a great dreadful and horripilating battle between great souled Rāma and wise Rāvaṇa. Rāma the singularly expert in the knowledge of weaponry neutralised the weapons used by Rāvaṇa such as Āgneyāstra with Āgneyāstra and Daivāstra with his Daivāstra. Then Rāvaṇa shot the Rākṣasāstra, the most dreadful weapon upon Rāma, extremely angry as he was. (24—28) The arrows shot from the bow of Rāvaṇa became most venomous snakes started falling around Śrī Rāma. Those arrows were all gold winged. The tips of those arrows were just like snakes emitting fires and they filled all the quarters everywhere. (29-30) Seeing those snakes filling every corner Rāma brought out Sauparaṇāstra and shot it in the battle. (31) Shot by Rāma those arrows assumed the shape of Garuḍa and as they were the enemies of snakes they destroyed all those snake-arrows. (32) When Rāvaṇa saw that his weapons failed he rained a terrific and thick shower of arrows. (33) Then again with innumerable arrows he wounded Rāma who could do anything with no difficulty and then injured Mātali also. (34) The furious Rāvaṇa then cutting the golden flag felled it in the back portion of the chariot and also hit the horses of Indra. (35)

Seeing the Lord in a tight corner, the gods, Gandharvas, the bards, the manes and the great sages were greatly pained. (36) All the monkeys alongwith Vibhiṣaṇa became wounded. And the twenty-armed Rāvaṇa holding bow in his hand looked like mountain Maināka. Now Rāma with his frowning eyebrows and eyes red with anger looked with the angry eyes as if he will burn the demon. He took his wonderful bow like a rainbow. (37-39) Taking the arrow like the fire of death in his hand, He cast his eyes on the enemy as if he will burn him only with the eyes. (40) The Lord Rāma assumed the form of death and while everybody witnessed he decided to show his valour, inflamed with his own splendour. He pulled the bow and hit Rāvaṇa cheering the monkey army. He appeared like the lord of death. (41-42) While attacking his enemy all the beings were frightened to see his angry face and the earth quaked. (43) Seeing Rāma in the fiercest form and the bad omen appearing, all beings were horrified and the fear took possession of Rāvaṇa also. At that time the gods, Siddhas, Gandharvas and Kinnaras sitting in their chariots witnessed that spectacular battle that was like the final deluge of the world. Taking Aindrāstra Rāma cut the head of Rāvaṇa. (44-45) Rāvaṇa's heads numerous in number, blood smeared, were falling from the sky like ripe fruits of a palmyra (Tāla). (46) It was impossible to distinguish either day or night or twilight or quarters. Even the body of Rāvaṇa was not visible in the battlefield. (47) Then Śrī Rāma was very much startled to see that he cut one hundred one heads of the same resplendence yet Rāvaṇa did not become lifeless. Then the delighter of Kausalyā, the knower of all weaponry alongwith all his weapons by his side thought in his mind—"My arrows through which I killed the extremely valorous demons, failed to kill Rāvaṇa. While Rāma was worried thus, Vibhīṣaṇa standing nearby informed Rāma—"He has been given a boon by Brahmā that his heads and arms, if they are cut, will at once reappear; so said lord Brahmā. In his navel region there is nectar in a form of coil. (48—53) Dry it with your Āgneyāstra and then only he will die. " Hearing Vibhīṣaṇa's words the swift acting Rāma, excessively angry took his fiery weapon and shot through the navel region of the Rākṣasa and then the mighty Lord cut his heads and arms also. Then the extremely angry Rāvaṇa took the terrific Mahāśakti and hurled it with the intention of killing Vibhīṣaṇa which Rāma cut into pieces with his sharp golden arrows. (54—57) Due to his heads chopped off, his splendour deserted Rāvaṇa and with his terrible heads cut down he looked ugly. (58) There remained only one main head and two arms and Rāvaṇa again started raining weapons angrily. (59) He showered arrows over Rāma and Rāma over him. This way continued the fierce and horripilating fight between the two. (60) Now Mātali reminded Rāma to shoot the weapon of Brahmā for killing Rāvaṇa. (61) The hour of his death fixed by the gods has arrived now. But do not cut his head. He will be killed not by cutting the head but by piercing through the chest. Thus reminded by Mātali, Rāma took the resplendent arrow hissing like a cobra, which had wind-god on its side, the sun and the fire on the head, the body of which was that of the sky, which had Meru and Mandara in its weightiness and the splendid Lokapālas placed in its joints. (62-65) It was inflamed and shining like sun. Rāma took this weapon that was competent to make this universe free from fear; consecrated it (the great arrow) with proper Mantra in a manner prescribed by the Vedas, and put it on his bow. (66-67) When Rāma put that arrow on his bow, all beings of the world were terrified and the earth quaked. (68) The angry Rāma pulled the string to the extreme, taking utmost care and shot this heart-piercing weapon for Rāvaṇa. (69) It was like unbearable Vajra shot by Indra. The terrible headed arrow like Yama fell on the chest of Rāvaṇa. That arrow capable of putting the body to end, most dreadful entered swiftly the heart of mighty Rāvaṇa and tore it apart. (70-71) It sucked the life of Rāvaṇa, entered the earth and came back to the quiver of Rāma. (72) The great bow alongwith the arrow fell down from the hands of Rāvaṇa. The dead body reeled with force and fell on the ground. (73)

Seeing him fallen on the ground the remaining Rākṣasas deprived of their lord ran away in all quarters due to extreme fear. (74) After the death of Rāvaṇa and the victory of Rāma the victorious monkeys came into a hilarious mood. (75) They hailed the victory of Rāma and the killing of Rāvaṇa. The melodious Dundubhis of gods sounded in the etherial region. (76)

A shower of flowers fell on Rāma from all sides and the Munis, Siddhas, Cāraṇas and Devas praised Rāma. (77) The nymphs happily danced in the sky. A glow of splendour arose from the body of Rāvaṇa, shining like the sun and entered into Rāma, the best among Raghus, witnessed by all gods and saints. The gods exclaimed "What a fortune the great Rāvaṇa possessed. (78-79) We are Sāttvika by nature, godly and favourite of Lord Viṣṇu. Yet in this changeable world we always remain overpowered by fear and sorrow. (80) This Rākṣasa, even though cruel, Brāhmaṇa killer, extremely Tāmasika, always indulging with others' wives, a hater of Viṣṇu and a torturer of the ascetics. (81) Yet right before the eyes of all entered into Rāma". While gods were so talking, Nārada said with a smile. (82) "Now listen to me O gods who are expert in religion and righteousness. Rāvaṇa due to the enmity to Rāma was engrossed in thinking of His sports day and night. (83) He always heard the exploits of Rāma from his servants although with the sense of animosity. Hearing of his death at the hands of Rāma he did see Him everywhere overwhelmed by fear as he was, he saw only Rāma twenty-four hours even in the dreams. His anger against Rāma proved to be more useful than the teachings from the preceptor. (84-85) In the end being killed by Rāma, all his sins were washed; free from the bondages he achieved the Sāyujya of Rāma. (86)

Even if there is somebody—a great sinner, vicious, infatuated towards the others' wives or wealth yet if he thinks of Rāma at the time of departure from the world—no matter whether with devotion or enmity—he immediately becomes pure-hearted and free from all the sins accumulated for the hundreds of past lives and attains Vaikuṇṭhaloka, the primal abode of Lord Viṣṇu which is adored by lord Indra etc. (87) Let the brave Rāma adorable even to Indra etc., protect me who after killing in the battle the ten-mouthed Rāvaṇa, a source of trouble for all the three worlds, is standing with the bow in his left hand propping it on the ground, with the right hand who is encircling the arrow, whose eyes are red in their corners, whose body is badly wounded by the arrows of the enemy, who is as resplendent as ten million suns and who is bedecked with the splendour of bravery. Thus ends canto XI of Yuddhakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Then with a cheerful mind he spoke to everybody—"It is by the mighty valour of your arms that Rāvaṇa has been killed by Me. (2) Your pious fame will remain on earth till sun and moon exist. The people will narrate your story inclusive of my exploits capable of sanctifying the three worlds, the remover of the faults of Kaliyuga and they will attain the supreme abode." In the meantime noticing the dead body of Rāvaṇa fallen on the ground. (3-4) All the ladies headed by Mandodarī who were under the protection of Rāvaṇa fell down before Rāvaṇa and were weeping full of grief. (5) Vibhīṣaṇa very miserable, overwhelmed by grief, weeping bitterly and lamenting fell before Rāvaṇa. (6) Rāma asked Lakṣmaṇa to console Vibhīṣaṇa and inspire him to do his brother's funeral rites. (7) The ladies like Mandodarī etc., are crying fallen on the ground, let him persuade those beloved ones of Rāvaṇa to stop from weeping. (8) Having been so instructed by Rāma Lakṣmaṇa went to Vibhīṣaṇa who was near the dead body of Rāvaṇa and himself looking like dead, who was overwhelmed by grief, and asked him—"What is this dead body to you, for which you are so much grieved or else who are you to him? Before this life what was the relation between you two and what will it be in the next life? Just as the crystals of sand in the current of water are simply led by the currents are sometimes united and othertimes separated. Similar is the case of the Jivas under the sway of Kāla. Again just as the plants come out of the seeds they are fructified and then they perish. Similarly the beings are born of other beings on account of the divine Māyā and perish. You, these, we and others are all born under the sway of Kāla. (9-13) The birth and death are bound to occur from which and at what time they are destined to. The birthless lord creates beings from other beings and kills them. (14) Like a playful child although without any expectations he creates the embodied Jivas who are created by him and have no freedom. The Jiva is called Dehī (embodied soul) because of its association with the body and the body is an outcome of another body. Just like the seeds come out of seeds. The eternal Ātmā is quite different from the body. As a matter of fact this division of Deha and Dehī, even though ancient, is the result of mere ignorance. (15-16) Variations, birth, death, decay, growth, actions and the fruits thereof—all these simply seem together in the Ātmā even though these are not its real characteristics. It is just like the changes which the wood undergoes when put into the fire. (17) Due to the deluded notion when the Ātmā assumes its identification with the body and with the result the aforesaid characteristics look like true similarly when the Jiva holds the truth fast and contemplates always on it, they start looking unreal. (18) Just as in deep slumber due to absence of ego the world disappears and ceases to remain an object of direct perception; similarly even during the wakeful state when egoistic sense disappears due to the dawn of knowledge the world loses its existence. (19) Therefore you should renounce the illusory mental characteristics, divorce the sense of 'I'ness and 'My'ness and concentrate your mind on Lord Rāma who is the overlord and the soul of souls. (20) Who is the Ātmā of all beings, the supreme, who is holding the illusory guise of human coil. Slowly detract your mind from the outer sense objects by pointing out the faults of the worldly relations and focus it towards the beatific joy that would be derived from Rāma. The relations like brother, father, mother, friend and dears are only due to assuming the body as self. (21-22) When the Ātmā knows itself by itself and realises that it is different from the body then who is whose relation, brother, mother, father and friend? (23) The objects like wife, house, the sense-objects like sound etc., various types of wealth, power, treasure, the servants, kingdom, territory, sons etc., are the product of ignorance. Since they are product of ignorance so they are ephemeral and perishable. (24-25) Now get up and always contemplate on Rāma in your heart with devout devotion and look after the stately affairs without any attachment with the sense that you are simply working out your Prārabdha without caring for past and future and doing whatever comes before you in present, transact righteously. This way you will not get tainted by the worldly evils. (26-27)

These are the orders from Rāma for you to perform the obsequies of your brother as per the scriptural injunctions and stop these ladies from crying O wise one. They must go to Lanka without delay. Hearing the appropriate advice of Lakṣmaṇa Vibhīṣaṇa gave up grief and the sense of infatuation and came to Rāma. After considering the pros and cons of those rightful words he, the knower of Dharma, decided within himself to literally follow the instructions of Rāma and made a reply to him—"O Lord, I do not feel like performing the funerals of Rāvaṇa as he was extremely wicked, a liar, cruel and most irreligious and licentious." Having heard his words the pleased Rāma said, "The enmity lasts only upto the death. Our mission is fulfilled. Perform his rites. He is mine as well as yours." (28—33) Acceding to what Rāma said the righteous and god-fearing Vibhīṣaṇa consoled the wise queen Mandodarī with soft words and instructed his relatives to make haste for the funeral rites. (34-35) Vibhīṣaṇa put his dead body on the pyre observing the procedure of Pitṛmedha, performed everything befitting to the Agnihotrīs accompanied and helped by his ministers and kith and kin and then put fire to the pyre in the strictly prescribed manner. (36-37) After bathing and with the wet garments offered oblations of gingili, Kuśa with water observing the right procedure. (38) After offering Jalāñjali to him he bade his Praṇāma by the head touching the ground and consoled the ladies again and again with consoling words. (39) Advised by him all the ladies went to the town and thereafter Vibhīṣaṇa coming by the side of Rāma stayed with humility. Rāma also alongwith the army, Sugrīva and Lakṣmaṇa, felt happy after killing the enemies just as Indra felt after killing Vṛtrāsura. Mātali also circumambulating and saluting Rāma, with his permission went to heaven through the sky. Then the cheerful Rāma spoke to Lakṣmaṇa as under. (40—43) I already gave the kingdom of Lanka to Vibhīṣaṇa. Yet you better go to Lanka and consecrate Vibhīṣaṇa on the throne through Brāhmaṇas with the recitation of Mantras in the prescribed manner. Having been so said Lakṣmaṇa accompanied by monkeys went there at once. (44—45) He did the coronation of the wise Rākṣasa king with the water of sea filled in golden pitchers auspiciously. (46) Thereafter accompanied by the citizens of Lanka with many presents in their hands, Vibhīṣaṇa himself carried rich presents, and he went alongwith Lakṣmaṇa to Śrī Rāma and bade his Dandavat Praṇāma to him who was capable of doing anything without much efforts. Rāma was much pleased to see Vibhīṣaṇa as the head of the state and considered his own self and Lakṣmaṇa quite blessed. Embracing Sugrīva Rāma spoke as under. (47—49)

"O brave and sinless one, it is with your help that I vanquished Rāvaṇa, and Vibhīṣaṇa could be enthroned in Lanka." (50) Then he addressed Hanumān who was most humbly sitting by his side—"Take permission from Vibhīṣaṇa and go to the palace of Rāvaṇa. (51) Inform Sītā about everything including Rāvaṇa's demise etc., and as soon as possible narrate to me what she says in reply. (52) The wise Hanumān, having been so instructed by Rāma entered into Lanka where he was venerably welcomed by the Rākṣasas. (53) Entering Rāvaṇa's palace he saw Jānakī sitting underneath the Śinśapā tree very lean and thin, in pitiable condition yet quite unblemished. (54) She was surrounded by the ogresses and meditating upon Rāma. Hanumān very humbly saluted her with folded hands and stood before her with devotion. Jānakī saw him. For a moment she was silent and then all of a sudden she remembered the past. (55-56) Recollecting that he was the messenger of Rāma, her face cheerfully brightened. Then Hanumān, the son of wind god, observing her in cheerful mood, made himself ready to relay the message of Rāma. (57)

Devi, Rāma, Sugrīva, Vibhīṣaṇa, Lakṣmaṇa and the monkey army—all are quite well. After vanquishing Rāvaṇa, his sons and ministers and his army, coronating Vibhīṣaṇa on throne, Rāma informs you of his own well-being. (58-59) Having heard the sweet message of her beloved spouse Sītā spouse, in a voice choked with joy—I fail to see a favourable thing in all the three worlds that I could do for you. (60) No gems or ornaments can equal to your sweet message. Having been so said by Sītā Hanumān made a reply. (61) I have the vision of Rāma who has killed his enemies and is quite well, this is much better and higher in value than any heap of gems or even the kingdom of heaven. (62) After hearing his words Sītā said to Hanumān— "I find that all good qualities are concentrated in you only, O gentle one. (63) Let Rāma permit me to see him as soon as possible. "Very well", said Hanumān, saluted her and then left for where Rāma was. (64) He narrated whatever Jānakī had said. For whose sake you have done all this that Jānakī as the fruit of your labour, is engulfed in grief. You behove to see that Sītā sir. Having been so said by Hanumān Rāma, the wisest among the wise, once again decided to discard the illusory Sītā and retake the real one deposited in the fire. He then said to Vibhīṣaṇa—(65-67)

"O King, go and bring Jānakī soon to me after serving her with a bath making her clean, well dressed and fully ornamented. (68) Vibhīṣaṇa on his turn went with Hanumān.

He got Sītā bathed by good natured and aged Rākṣasa ladies. (69) After having her ornamented and accommodating her in a beautiful palanquin. She, the auspicious one, was well escorted by many warriors armed with clubs and well dressed (wearing Kañcuka and turban). (70) At that time all monkeys rushed to see Sītā. The escorting guards with stick in their hands stopped the monkeys from all sides, making noise and shouts took her to Rāma. Seeing her in palanquin from a considerable distance Rāma said to Vibhīṣaṇa, "Why are they stopping monkeys? Let them see her as a mother. (71-73) And let Jānakī come to me on foot". Hearing those words of Rāma Jānakī got down from the palanquin and walking slowly on foot came near Rāma. Rāma on his turn, seeing that illusory Sītā made for ad hoc purposes, scolded her with unbecoming words. Irritated by the words of Rāma, Sītā asked Lakṣmaṇa to kindle fire immediately, for the credence of Rāma and the world too. (74-77) Observing that Rāma also approved of it. Lakṣmaṇa immediately made a huge pile of wood and put fire to it. (78) And then the vanquisher of the foe Lakṣmaṇa came and waited upon the side of Rāma silently. Then Sītā with full devotion circumambulated Rāma and while the whole universe and the ladies of gods and demons were watching, Maithilī bade her Praṇāma to gods and Brahmanas, approached the fire and spoke with folded hands—"If my heart never wanders and is always centred around Rāma, let the universal witness fire god save me from all sides." So saying Sītā made circumambulation of fire and entered into the inflamed fire with a quite fearless heart. (79-83) All the beings, Siddhas were very much moved and felt sorry to see Sītā entering the fire. They whispered to each other—how is it so that the Omniscient Rāma deserted Sītā his own Lakṣmī ? (84)

Thus ends canto XII of Yuddhakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśvara.

They all with their folded hands requested the Paramātmā Rāma (1-3) You are the maker of all the worlds and the spectator also, you are the supreme knowledge embodied; you are the eighth among the Vasus and Śaṅkara among Rudras. (4) You are the four faced Brahmā the first creator of the universe. The twin Aświnī Kumāras are your two nostrils and the sun and moon your two eyes. (5) You are the beginning and end of the creation, you are the eternal and the one without second, always luminous, always pure, always wakeful, always free, attributeless and without the second. (6) To those who are under the sway of your Māyā you appear as just a human being but to those who always remember your name you are sentience embodied. (7) Rāvaṇa forcefully snatched our territory by force. You killed him today and we have regained our position. (8) While the gods were praising like this the grandfather Brahmā in person, after saluting him spoke to Rāma who had adopted the path of truth. (9)

Brahmā said—O Rāma I salute you—who are the cause of sustenance of the universe; who could be meditated upon in the heart by the knowers of Adhyātma, who are beyond the opposite pairs of what should be abandoned and what should be accepted; above and beyond all, one without the second; one who is only the existence in reality; seated in all hearts and

(11) You are beyond the range of Māyā, the spouse of Lakṣmī, the very first person, the beginning of the world, beyond measurements (or else beyond the logical proofs like Pratyakṣa etc.), the destroyer of ignorance, adorable to Munis worth meditating to the Yogīs, proponent of the Yoga process, complete in every respect, the entertainer of the world. I salute that lovely form of Rāma. (12) You are neither Bhāva nor Abhāva. The Yogīs headed by lord Śiva always adore your two lotus feet; You are constant, pure, full of knowledge, endless, Prāṇava in person, you are like wild fire for all demons. I adore you O brave Rāma. (13) You are my lord. You perform every mission of those whose master you accept to become, you are beyond all measurement, you are the Mādhava, sustainer of the whole universe; you can be attained through Bhakti only. When somebody exclusively meditates upon your real form, you remove all his fears of Samsāra. You always remain in the hearts of those who have purified their heart with the practice of Yoga. obeisance to you O Rāma, lovely like blue lotus. You are the beginning and end of the wheel of creation, the overlord of all the worlds. You cannot be comprehended through earthly measurements. You can be adored only by those who are full of devotion and faith. (15) O Mādhava, who, the person overpowered by Māyā, is competent to know you who are beyond the ken of Pramāṇas and beyond all measures also, who are venerable to Munis? In Vrindavana even though you yourself adored gods yet you are adorable to the leading deities like lord Śiva. I adore such Rāma who is the bliss solidified. (16) I pay my obeisance, to the lord of Mathura, the emerald hue, who can be described only by Vedas and Śāstras; who is ever joyful, who is undifferentiated knowledge and the beginningless; who adopted a human form in order to fulfil my desire. (17) One who will recite this primal prayer composed by Brahmā, capable of providing supreme knowledge, in the world will get rid of all sins by meditating on Rāma and Kṛṣṇa (as both are one) the fulfiller of all desires. (18)

After hearing the prayer from Brahmā the primal father of the universe the fire god manifested himself with Sītā, the daughter of Videha in his lap, who was haloed by a shining red splendour, in red garments and divinely ornamented and he the witness of all the universe (the fire god) spoke to Śrī

Rāma, the remover of his devotee's sufferings—O lord of Raghus, take back Devī Jānakī whom you deposited with me (as a trust). (19-20) O lord you created an illusory Sītā in order to kill the ten-faced Rāvaṇa. Now the Rāvaṇa alongwith his sons and relatives has been killed and the burden of the earth has been removed. (21) That reflection of Sītā disappeared after fulfilling the mission for which she was created. Then the happy Rāma accepted the cheerful Sītā and worshipped fire god. (22) Śrī Rāma, the spouse of Lakṣmī, took Sītā, the mother of all the three worlds, and the incarnation of Lakṣmī, ever inseparable from him, in his side. When Indra saw Rāma and Sītā together, spreading resplendence, he came and started praising him with folded hands and in a voice choked with emotion. (23)

Indra said—I adore Śrī Rāma whose hue is like lotus, whose name is like wild fire to burn the forest of the Saṃsāra, whom Pārvatī meditates in her heart, who is bliss incarnate, who is the cause of removing the shackles of Saṃsāra, in whom the gods like lord Śiva take refuge. (24) I adore Śrī Rāma, Hari the destroyer of the burden of the earth and the one who is the only agent of removing the miseries of gods, who is in human form although being formless, who is worth adoring,

(26) I take refuge in Śrī Rāma who is the joy of Śrī Jānakī, who always remains beyond the reach of worldly people and who is always very close to the Yogīs, who is embodied consciousness and joy. (27) You appear like a human being and so are your pastimes. It is because of association of your Yogamāyā and her qualities. Those whose ears are filled with your joyful pranks and stories become in this world joy personified themselves. (28) O lord, I was totally intoxicated with the praise that I received and due to drinking liquor I always slighted everybody due to the pride of being super ruler of all. Now by the grace of your lotus-feet my pride of being the lord of the three worlds has vanished. Now have a vision of the father of this body of yours (Daśaratha). (34) Then Rāma saw before him Daśaratha sitting in an aerial car. He alongwith Lakṣmaṇa saluted him by their heads with devotion. (40) O lord, if you have affection for me, please oblige me by taking the auspicious bath today alongwith Sītā. (41) And tomorrow after having full ornamentation you, Lakṣmaṇa and we all will start. Hearing so Śrī Rāma made a reply to Vibhīṣaṇa. (42)

My brother Bharata must be waiting for me. Although very tender he is having matted locks and wearing bark garments and meditating on Śabdabrahma. Having been so said by Rāma Vibhīṣaṇa almost made a shower of gold, gems and garments according to the desires and likings of the monkeys. (45-50) They all have my permission to go where they wish. Sugrīva, you may soon go to Kishkindha alongwith all the soldiers. (51) Vibhīṣaṇa, practising my devotion, stay in your kingdom Lanka. Even gods including Indra cannot do any harm to you. (52) I myself wish to go to my father's capital, Ayodhya. Being so said by Rāma, those mighty monkeys and the Rākṣasa Vibhīṣaṇa requested with folded hands—"We all want to accompany you to Ayodhya, O best of the Raghus." (53-54) After watching you consecrated on the throne and saluting the mother Kausalyā we will decide to go to our kingdom. Please do permit us, O Lord. (55) "Very well" said Rāma and addressed Sugrīva to mount Puṣpaka alongwith Vibhīṣaṇa and Hanumān immediately. (56) Then Sugrīva alongwith his army and Vibhīṣaṇa with his ministers quickly mounted on the divine Puṣpaka. (57) After all were mounted the grand chariot of Kubera taking a leap from the ground flew through the sky with permission of Rāma. (58) Seated in that shining chariot in the shape of a goose, Rāma was happy and appeared like another Brahmā. (59)

At that time the chariot of Kubera shining like the sun, which was obtained after practising severe penances, looked most beautiful and because Rāma was sitting in it with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa its splendour was enhanced more. (60)

Thus ends canto XIII of Yuddhakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Canto XIV

Journey to Ayodhya—hospitality from Bharadwāja and meeting Bharata

श्रीमहादेव उवाच

(1—6)

Śrī Mahādeva said— From the chariot Śrī Rāma cast a glance on all sides and spoke to moon-faced Sītā— "Look at the splendrous Lanka located at the peak of mount Trikuta and look at the battlefield muddy with the mire of flesh. (1-2) Here a great massacre of monkeys and demons took place and here the Rākṣasa king Rāvaṇa lays down being killed by me. (3) At this place Kumbhakarna, Indrajit and many more were killed. Now this is the bridge built by me over the ocean full of water. (4) Now see this holy place named Setubandha on the shore of the sea which has been worshipped and worth worshipping by all the three worlds. (5) It is most sacred capable of removing all the sins by its vision alone. Here I installed the idol of lord Śiva known as Rāmeśwara. (6) Now this is the place where Vibhīṣaṇa with his ministers surrendered before me. And now we reach Kishkindha rich with beautiful gardens, the township of Sugrīva. There Sugrīva under the instruction of Rāma brought all the monkey ladies headed by Tārā in order to please Sītā. (7-8) When Rāma noticed that the Puspaka accommodated all the female monkeys and shot through the sky, he again said—look at this mountain. It is Rishyamuka. Here I killed Vālī. (9) Now here comes Panchavati where I killed the demons. Now look at the two auspicious Āśramas of Agastya and Sūtīkṣṇa. (10) Look O of the beautiful hue, all these ascetics are visible. Now, that is the great mountain Chitrakuta shining. (11) Here Bharata, the son of Kaikeyī, came to propitiate me. Now see, the Āśrama of Bharadwāja looking on the bank of Yamunā. (12) Now this is Bhāgīrathī Gaṅgā, capable of purifying the whole universe. Now see there looks river Sarayū having a number of sacrificial poles. (13) Now there looks Ayodhya. Bid your, Praṇāma to it, O beautiful lady. Commenting this way one by one Śrī Rāma reached the hermitage of Bharadwāja. (14)

After the completion of fourteen years on the fifth day the lord Rāma, delighter of Raghus visited Muni Bharadwāja and alongwith his brother Lakṣmaṇa adored the Muni. (15)

The sage was sitting there and Śrī Rāma very humbly asked him—"Have you heard sir, if Bharata alongwith the younger brother is alright? (16) Is Ayodhya running a good time? Are the mothers still alive?" Hearing Rāma's words Bharadwāja cheerfully replied and said—"All are well. The great souled Bharata taking fruits and roots as his food, having matted locks and wearing bark garments, surrendering all the state affairs before the sandals, is eagerly awaiting you. Whatever you did in Dandaka, O best of Raghus, how Sītā was abducted and how the ogre dynasty was annihilated—I know everything through my penances and by your grace." (17—20) You are the supreme Brahma bereft of beginning, middle and end. You created water first and slept therein, O creator of the universe. (21) You yourself are the universe and the Ātmā of all beings and hence You are Nārāyaṇa. Brahmā was born of the lotus that sprouted from Your navel region and became the initial father of the world. (22) Therefore You are the lord of all the worlds and venerable to the whole universe. You are Viṣṇu, Jānakī Lakṣmī and Lakṣmaṇa is Śeṣa. (23) You create this universe within You by yourself with the help of Your Māyā. Like sky You never get tainted and simply witness and watch through Your sentient power. (24) You yourself are both the inner and outer sides of all beings

O delighter of Raghus You are perfect yet those, whose eyes are deluded, find You as finite. (25) You are the world. You are the substratum of the world and the sustainer also. You are the enjoyer and enjoyable both to all beings O lord of the universe. (26) Whatever can be seen, remembered or heard—is all nothing but You O best of the Raghus. There is nothing apart from You. Your Māyā inspired by Your powers creates all the worlds through the three Guṇas and Ahāṅkāra etc. Therefore all activities of Māyā is supposed to be your doing. (27-28) Just as in the near proximity of magnet, the iron pieces do move even though they are inert, similarly as soon as Māyā comes within Your sight, it creates the universe. (29) When You decide to sustain the world You at once have two bodies even though really You have no body. Virāṭ is Your gross body and Sūtra the subtle one. (30) From Your Virāṭ aspect thousands of incarnations manifest themselves and when the mission is over, they merge in the same Virāṭ, O delighter of Raghus. (31) Those who sing or narrate the stories of these incarnations with exclusiveness of mind, are sure to get the liberation, O best among the Raghus. (32) You were solicited by Brahmā in the past for unburdening the earth, O Rāghava. Pleased with the penances and on account of his request You manifested yourself in Raghu dynasty. (33) O Rāma, you performed the most tedious job for the sake of gods. Now you will stay on the earth for several thousand years in your human coil, will do many more difficult tasks capable of removing sins for the good of the two worlds and will fill up the universe with your fame. (34-35)

 O lord of the world, I request you to sanctify my house. Please stop today, take food with your army, and go to the town tomorrow. (36)

"Very well" said Rāma and halted there in the grand Āśrama. He was entertained fully alongwith his army, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. (37) Thereafter, Rāma thought for a moment and asked Hanumān—"Hanumān, immediately go to Ayodhya. (38) Find out if everybody there in the palace is alright. Then go to Shringaverapura and tell my friend Guha that I have arrived with Jānakī and Lakṣmaṇa. Then go to Nandigram and see my brother Bharata and tell him the well-being of mine alongwith the wife and brother. The abduction of Sītā and killing of Rāvaṇa etc., all my activities you must inform to my brother in a serial order. Tell him that after killing all the enemies I am coming with my wife, Lakṣmaṇa and bears and monkeys fully successful in my mission. After making this report find out in detail the routine of Bharata, come back to me soon."
 "Very well" said Hanumān and he went to Nandigram in human form as speedily as the wind just as Garuḍa dives swiftly to

Hanumān then reached Shringaverapura. Approaching Guha he said in a sweet voice, overjoyed as he was from within. (46) The glorious Rāma, the son of Daśaratha, with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa, the righteous one and your friend is all right and has communicated his well-being to you. (47) As soon as permitted by Bharadwāja, today the Rāghava will come and you will see the lord, the best of the Raghus. (48) So saying the splendrous Hanumān horripilated as he was, He jumped through the sky and with an excessive speed like that of the forceful wind. (49) On the way he saw Rāmātūrtha and thereafter the river Sarayū. Crossing it Hanumān happily went to Nandigram. (50) At a distance of only two miles from Ayodhya he saw Bharata quite lean and thin and in a pitiable condition. He was living like an ascetic in the Āśrama. (51) His body was dirty, smeared with Bhasma (ashes), having his locks matted and wearing bark-made garments, taking only fruits and roots as his food, always meditating and worried on account of Rāma. He was holding two sandals before him and as the representative he was ruling over the earth alongwith ministers and leading citizens. They all wearing saffron coloured garments who were surrounding him. He looked like embodied Dharma in person. And Hanumān, the son of wind-god, spoke to him with folded hands—(52—54)

Whom you always think of, the ascetic Rāma, living in Dandaka forest and for whom you are always grieved, he communicates his well-being to you. I will give you a happy news. Now give up the terrific grief right at this moment; you will meet your brother Rāma. (55-56) Rāma killed Rāvaṇa in battle, regained Sītā and is coming back with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa successfully completing his mission. (57) Having so heard Bharata of great splendour, the delighter of Kaikeyī went into swoon due to the excessive joy and not maintaining his normalcy he fell down. (58) (Being his normal self) Bharata embraced Hanumān, the narrator of sweetest news, and wetted him with the tears of delight and said. (59) Whatever you are—a god or a human being—it is very kind of you to have come here. In exchange of the good news you told I give you one lakh cows, one hundred villages and sixteen young ladies fully bedecked with all ornaments. (60-61) In the same continuation Bharata again said to Hanumān—"Many many years have passed since I am hearing today something of my lord who went to the forest long long ago. Today it seems to me that the worldly proverbial saying is very true and auspicious that in the life of a person if he is alive he happens to attain joy even if it is after one hundred years. Now tell me how this union of Rāghava with the monkeys took place, so that I may have credence in what you say." Having been so said by the great souled Bharata, Hanumān narrated the exploits of Rāma in full one by one, hearing which from Hanumān Bharata was immensely happy. (62-66)

Then the happy Bharata passed order to happy Śatrughna—"Let the wise and exalted persons worship all the godly deities in the town with various types of offerings and Balidāna (sacrifices). Let the Sūtas, Vaitālikas (bards), Bandīs and those who recite the praises (do their jobs). (67-68) Let the dance-girls in hundreds and hundreds go out in parties today itself. Let the royal ladies, the ministers, the army containing elephants, horses and infantry battalions, Brāhmaṇas, the citizens and the kings present here at the moment go out of the town to see the moon-faced Rāma." Hearing Bharata's instructions and inspired by Śatrughna they decorated the town with the arches of shining pearls and gems; with the flags and banners of various colours and types and so were decorated all the houses by experts in interior and exterior decorations. (69-72) All started going out in groups—all eager to see Rāma—one hundred thousand horses—ten thousand elephants—ten thousand chariots bedecked with gold-work—they started with many auspicious things small and big. (73-74) Thereafter came out the royal ladies in palanquins.

Bharata himself put the two sandals on the head and with his folded hands accompanied by Śatrughna walked on foot. And at that very moment appeared from a distance the aircraft shining like a moon. (75-76) The Puṣpaka was resplendent like sun. It was built by Brahmā out of his will. In it were the two brave brothers Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa with Sītā, Sugrīva, the senior most among the monkeys and Vibhīṣaṇa alongwith his ministers. Hanumān pointed then out to them and said—"Look you all, they are there." (77-78) Then a joyous uproar rent the sky and touched the heaven. It was a cry of women, children, youngsters and the old ones that—it is Rāma. (79) People climbed down to the ground from their chariots, elephants and the horses. They saw Rāma in the airship like moon appearing in the sky. (80)

Bharata, with folded hands and happy looked at Rāma and then he saluted him who was in the forefront in the Vimāna as if sun on the peak of Meru. Thereafter the Vimāna landed with the permission of Rāma. (81-82) Then Bharata and Śatrughna also were boarded into the plane. Meeting Rāma, Bharata again saluted him with great pleasure. (83) Rāma saw Bharata after the expiry of a long period so he raised him, embraced him and took him in his lap. (84) Bharata overwhelmed by the love and happiness met Lakṣmaṇa and while anouncing his name he saluted Sītā. (85) He embraced Sugrīva, Jāmbavanta, the crown prince Aṅgada, Maīnda, Dwivida, Nīla, R̥ṣabha, Suṣeṇa, Nala, Gavākṣa, Gandhamādana, Śarabha and Panasa. (86-87) The honoured monkeys assuming human forms enquired of Bharata about his well-being. They were quite, serene and happy at the time. (88) Thereafter embracing Sugrīva Bharata affectionately said—"It is with the help offered by you that Rāma killed Rāvaṇa and won victory. (89) Sugrīva, You are fifth brother to the four of us. Śatrughna on the other hand saluted Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa and then most humbly adored the feet of Sītā. Rāma approached the mother who was pale and grief-stricken. (90-91) He fell on her feet. Touching the feet he cheered up the mother and then he bade his Praṇāma to the other two mothers Kaikeyī and Sumitrā. (92) Bharata put the two sandals of Rāma adored by him so far, under his feet with great devotion. (93) (And said) this kingdom was with me as a trust, now I hand it over to you. Today my birth is fruitful and my desires fulfilled that I see you come back to Ayodhya again, O lord. The store-house, the army and the treasury has been ten times more enriched. (94-95) Now you rule your kingdom O lord of the world with your splendour. The monkeys shed tears to see Bharata so saying. They also praised him with excessive joy. Then the happy Rāma having Bharata in his embrace went by the same Vimāna to the hermitage of Bharata. There he climbed down from the Puṣpaka to the ground and said to Puṣpaka—"Now go to Kubera. I permit you to remain in the service of Kubera, the lord of riches." (96—99) Just as Indra bows down before his Guru Brhaspati similarly Rāma offered his Praṇāma to Guru Vasiṣṭha. He offered a magnificent and precious seat to Guru and himself sat down near him. (100)

Śrī Mahādeva said—Thereafter the son of Kaikeyī Bharata, with great devotion took his hands to his head and requested his elder brother. (1) O Rāma, you honoured my mother by giving the kingdom to me. Now I hand it over to you as you entrusted me with it. (2) So saying he prostrated with devotion in his feet and requested him very much alongwith Kaikeyī and the Guru (3) Then the lord playing the part of human being with the association of his Māyā, accepted the kingdom saying very well. Otherwise what has the Paramātmā to do with the petty human kingdom who always remains steeped in divine pleasure of the self, who is the only embodiment of pleasure and knowledge together, who is completely untainted with the mundane joy and who is the overlord of the entire cosmos; whose slight frowning destroys the three worlds; by whose grace one can get even the riches of Indra, if exclusively devoted to Him and who creates this great creation just in a childish prank. To such a lord of Lakṣmī what is this trifle earthly kingdom. (5-7) Yet to fulfil the desire of the devotees he assumes the illusory human body and follows norms of the human world. (8) Thereafter ordered by Śatrugṇna, a skilful barber (was called). The necessary paraphernalia of the coronation ceremony of Rāma were brought. (9) First Bharata, Mahātmā Lakṣmaṇa, the monkey king Sugrīva and the demon king Vibhīṣaṇa took bath. (10) Then the matted locks of Rāma were shaved and he also took bath and was bedecked with colourful garlands and fragrant paste. He wore precious garments and his bodily resplendence multiplied. (11) Lakṣmaṇa and Bharata did the decoration of Rāma and the royal ladies of the gynaeceum bedecked the beautiful Sītā with precious garments and ornaments and the happy good looking and motherly Kausalyā made arrangements of getting all the monkey ladies well dressed. Thereafter under the instruction of Śatrughna the wise Sumantra harnessed a chariot resplendent like sun and put it before Rāma. The truthful and righteous Rāma climbed on the chariot. (12—15) Sugrīva, the crown prince Aṅgada, Hanumān and Vibhīṣaṇa took divinely garments after bath and divinely ornamented followed Rāma on chariots, horses and elephants. The wives of Sugrīva and Sītā etc., started for the great Ayodhya on palanquins. (16-17) Just as the wielder of Vajra, Indra goes on his chariot driven by green horses in the accompaniment of gods so went Rāma to the great town Ayodhya in his chariot. (18) Bharata was driving the chariot and the greatly splendrous Śatrughna held the sceptre built of gems and Lakṣmaṇa took the fan. (19) Sugrīva, subduer of foes on one side and the Rākṣasa king Vibhīṣaṇa on the other moved the chowries shining like moon. (20) At that time the sweet sound of bards, Siddhas and divinely looking Ṛṣis while they were praising Rāma, was heard. (21) The monkeys were sitting on the elephants and were in human forms. Accompanied with the musical instruments like Bheri, Śaṅkha, Mṛdaṅga, Paṇava and Ānaka etc., filling the sky with their sounds, Rāma, the best among the Raghus, went to the well decorated town Ayodhya. The inhabitants of the town saw Rāghava. (22-23) Those virtuous citizens of Ayodhya, were overjoyed to see

Rāma, whose bodily hue was blackish like Dūrva leaf's; who had a precious diadem (on head) and other ornaments on different parts of the body; whose eyes were big and red like lotus; who wore the precious yellow garment embroidered with gold threads and studded with gems; whose chest was wide enough; who wore a necklace of invaluable pearls and was resplendent; who was being adored by monkey chiefs like Sugrīva quite calmly; was splendrous like sun; his limbs were smeared with musk paste and there was hanging a garland of Kalpavṛkṣa flowers from the neck. (24—26) When the female gentry heard Rāma coming, their faces were brightened with excessive joy, They gave up all domestic chores and finely dressed they climbed the mansions on the roofs. (27) After seeing Rāma whose Darśana was a matter of celebrity to all the eyes, the ladies started throwing flowers. Their faces were bright and beautified by their smiles. They swallowed through their eyes the image of Rāma which was a Rasāyana to the eyes and mind, and mentally embraced it that was joy embodied. (28) The lord Rāma looked at his subjects with his affectionately smiling eyes like another Prajāpati, slowly went to the well decorated palace of his father which was grand like the palace of Indra. inside the palace Rāma happily adored the feet of his mother. Thereafter the best in the Raghu dynasty bade his Praṇāma to all the wives of his father with veneration. (30)

Then the truthfully valorous Rāma asked Bharata to allocate his own palace furnished with all paraphernalia to his friend monkey king Sugrīva and to arrange residences for all others to live in comfortably. (31-32) Being so instructed Bharata did accordingly and then he, the younger brother of Rāma spoke to the lustrous Sugrīva. (33) Please send some very smart and swift persons to fetch sacred water from the four oceans for the consecration of Rāma. (34) Sugrīva despatched Jāmbavanta, Hanumān, Aṅgada and Śuṣeṇa. They went speedily like wind and brought the sacred water filled in golden pitchers. Śatrughna alongwith his ministers handed over the sacred water to Vasiṣṭha for consecration of Rāma. Then the aged Vasiṣṭha who had full control on his senses, accompanied by other Brāhmaṇas seated Rāma with Sītā on the throne built of gems and Vasiṣṭha, of Rāma. They sprinkled the sacred fragrant water with Kuśa and Tulasī leaves in it over Rāma's head with great joy like Vasue did to Indra. They again consecrated Rāma alongwith the R̥tviks and senior Brāhmaṇas, spinster girls and ministers, with the juice of several medicinal herbs while the gods were watching from sky and the four Lokapālas accompanied by their attendants, were praising him. (35—41) Śatrughna held the white and auspicious umbrella while Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa had the white chowries. (42) Inspired by Indra, Vāyu offered a golden necklace. Indra himself offered with devotion to the Emperor Rāma a necklace of rubies and studded with gold and gems. The gods and Gandharvas started singing and the nymphs danced. (43-44) The divinely kettle-drums sounded and there was a rain of flowers from the sky. Now lord Śiva alongwith goddess Pārvatī and all the gods started praising Rāma with great devotion; Rāma, whose bodily hue was blackish like fresh sprouts of Dūrvā grass; big eyes like lotus petals, lustrous like crores of suns, bedecked with diadem beautiful like crores of libidos, covered with yellow garment, having divine ornaments, smeared with divine sandal paste, resplendent like ten thousand suns, in two armed form having in his left side Sītā who held red lotus in her hand, fully ornamented and of golden hue. Rāma was holding her with his left hand around her waist. (45—50)

Śrī Mahādeva said—My obeisance to Rāma alongwith his Śakti, tender like blue lotus and blackish as well, ornamented with diadem, necklace and armlet etc., seated on the throne and immensely resplendent. (51) You are bereft of beginning, middle, an end, one without second. You create, sustain and destroy the world with your Māyā. You do not get tainted since you are always absorbed in your innate bliss and you are at the same time beyond the reach of guile. (52) In order to guide your devotees you envelope yourself with the three modes of Māyā and play the role in the various forms of gods and human beings etc., through differently incarnating yourself. You are recognised in your real form only by wise Yogīs. (53) You create the universe from a fragment of yours and then hold it in the form of Śeṣa from below and from the above you sustain it assuming different forms like sun, wind, moon, herbs and rain. (54) It is you who in the form of fire (digestive) inside the embodied beings digest completely whatever they eat. In this process you are helped by the five winds and this way you sustain the entire universe. (55) O lord, it is you and your effulgence that appears as lustre in the moon, sun and the fire; in the form of sentience among all beings; appears in the form of fortitude, valour and durability of life. (56) To the pluralists you differently appear as Brahmā, Śiva and Viṣṇu, as Kāla and

Karma, as moon and sun but as a matter of fact you are the supreme Brahma one without the second in this universe. (57)

Just as in Vedas, Purāṇas and in the world you are known as different incarnated forms like fish etc., even though you are singularly one similarly whatever divisions like existent and non-existent are there in the world; it is all only you and you alone and there is nothing different from you. (58) In this limitless creation whatever is born is being born and will be born—whether mobile or immobile—there is nothing without you. Therefore you are the farthest beyond from beyond. (59) The people deluded by your Māyā do not know your real form of Paramātmā. Your matchless lordly form reveals itself only to those whose hearts are purified by the services rendered by them to your devotees. (60) Even gods like Brahmā etc., having their intellect indulged in the outer objects, do not know your real form e.g., consciousness in person. Therefore the wise man adores only this form of yours and gets liberated devoid of all sorrows. (61) I, muttering your name, quite blessed, live always with Bhawānī in Kashi and for the liberation of dying persons I initiate them with the saving Mantra of your name Rāma. Indra said—O lord, the Rākṣasa king, on account of the boon granted by Brahmā to him, deprived me of all godly comforts. By your grace the wicked demoniacal enemy has been killed and all my (prerogatives) bestowed to me. (64)

Gods said—O Murārī, O Viṣṇu, this wicked Rākṣasa deprived us of our shares in the sacrifices offered by Brāhmaṇas. Today you have killed him therefore by your grace we will again be having our sacrificial shares as usual. (65)

Manes said—O great souled, this wicked demon used to eat by force the rice balls and ablutions offered by our descendants in the holy places like Gaya etc. Today he has been killed. So we will be now getting strengthened (by enjoying Piṇḍa etc.) (66)

been singing your nectarean pastimes. Doing that we were always absorbed in a blissful state. (68) After that, O Rāma, we were overpowered by wicked Rāvaṇa and we sang only his praises and propitiated him only. (69) Now we have been saved by you as this wicked Rākṣasa has been killed. In the same way the great serpents, Siddhas, Kinnaras, Maruts, Vasus, Munis, cows, Guhyakas, birds alongwith the Prajāpatis and the groups of celestial nymphs—all approached Rāma and it was to them a celebrity of the eyes to see him. They separately praised Rāma. And Rāma on his turn gave proper respect to them. (70–72) Brahmā, Rūdra etc., and all others went to their respective abodes happily praising Rāma and singing His Līlās. (73) They all were meditating upon Rāma in their heart who was drenched with the water of consecration, alongwith Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa, seated on the throne, the emperor of emperors. And so they went away. (74) At that time when the musical instruments were sounding in the sky, the gods in the heaven were praising him with their heart full of joy and showering flowers; the group of Maharṣis surrounding him from all sides; were praising: the lord Rāma looked so splendidous with his black complexion and the beautiful face bedecked with the charming smile, resplendent like crores of suns, who was being adored by Sītā, Lakṣmaṇa, Hanumān, Munis and monkeys. (75)

Śrī Mahādeva said—When the emperor Rāma conducive of pleasure to all was enthroned, the earth was overfull of crops and trees laden with fruits. (1) Flowers formerly without smell became fragrant and beauteous. (After his coronation) first of all he gave one lakh horses, one lakh milch cows and one hundred bullocks to Brāhmaṇas and then he again donated thirty crores of gold sovereigns to Brāhmaṇas (2-3) Various garments, ornaments and gems he gifted happily to Brāhmaṇas. And then to Sugrīva he gave a necklace made of gems resplendent like sun. The devotee loving Rāma, the delight of Raghus gave two divine armlets to Aṅgada. (4-5) To Sītā, the best among the Raghu dynasty, gave a necklace very precious bedecked with rubies and gems and effulgent like crores of moons. (6) Sītā, the daughter of Janaka, took the necklace from her neck and looked sometimes at monkeys and sometimes at her spouse. (7) Comprehending the intention of Sītā, Rāma looked at her and said—Vaidehī of the beautiful face, you can give it to any person you are pleased with. (8) Sītā gave that necklace to Hanumān while Rāma watched it. That necklace was a feather in his cap and Hanumān was glorified with it. (9) Rāma saw Hanumān present with folded hands and fully satisfied with his supreme devotion, he said (10) Hanumān, I am pleased with you. Ask any boon you desire. I will grant you—even though it may be a rare thing for gods also and in all the three worlds. (11) Hanumān on his turn bowing his head to Rāma said cheerfully—“O Rāma, while remembering your name my mind is never satiated. (12) Therefore, I desire to stay on the earth always remembering your name. So, let my body be alive till your name exists in the world. O Rājendra, this is the boon I seek.” Rāma said—“Be it so and perfectly liberated in life stay comfortably on the earth. (13-14) In the end of the Kalpa you will get my Sāyujya, there is no doubt. (Thereafter Jānakī also granted a boon) she said wherever you remain O Hanumān, all enjoyments may follow you by my orders. Having been so said by the lord and his Śakti, the happy Hanumān with tearful eyes bade his Praṇāma again and again and with great pain the wise one went to Himalayas to practise penances. (15-17)

Then Rāma approached Guha who stood with folded hands and said to him—“My friend, go to your beautiful

(19) Having so said Rāma gave him divine ornaments, a sizable territory, and the knowledge of truth. (20) Embraced by Rāma, Guha became happy and went home. Thereafter Rāma entertained all other monkeys who have come to Ayodhya with invaluable ornaments and garments. Then many other monkeys like Sugrīva and Rākṣasa Vibhīṣaṇa were properly honoured by the Paramātmā Rāma and they happily departed as they had come. (21-23) Sugrīva etc., cheerfully went to Kiṣkindhā and, having received the kingdom free of enemies, properly honoured by Śrī Rāma, the unguiled Vibhīṣaṇa went to Lanka. (Having seen everybody off) a loving Rāma ruled the entire country. (24-25) Even though quite unwilling Lakṣmaṇa was coronated as Crown Prince. He with exclusive devotion went on serving Rāma. (26) Even though Rāma was Paramātmā, the dispenser of the fruit of Karma untainted, devoid of the sense of doership, eternally immutable, ever happy within himself, just for leading and teaching the world He performed several sacrifices like Aśwamedha guise (so He did everything on the human norms). (30) In the presence of elders the younger one never died. All worshipped Rāma and all meditated upon him. The clouds rained timely and in right proportion. The subjects observed their prescribed duties and they possessed the proper qualities of their Varnas and Āśramas. (31–32) Rāma on his part protected the subjects like a father behaves to His own children. He was having all auspicious characteristics, observing all rules of righteousness. He did rule his kingdom for ten thousand years. (33–34)

This Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a secret, capable of giving riches and prosperity, long life, good health and virtuousness; this secret was formerly taught by Ādi Śambhu. (35) The person who listens to this attentively or else recites it with the full contentment of mind gets all his desires fulfilled and is freed within a moment from crores of sins. (36) One who hears this episode of Rāma's coronation with sincere attention he obtains huge amount of money if he so desires. One who recites this from the beginning with a desire for son, gets a noble son capable of commanding respect from noble persons. (37)

If a king listens to this Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, he gets a big and prosperous territory for a kingdom, conquers his enemies and remains invincible to them, becomes victorious and bereft of sorrows and miseries. (38) If ladies listen to Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa their sons live long and they are respected by them; even a barren woman gets a lovely son if she listens to this story devotedly. (39) One who listens to it with devout faith, he conquers the anger and all demerits like it. Then he overpowering all difficulties becomes fearless gets the devotion to Rāma and becomes happy. (40) Those who listen to Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa from beginning get all gods pleased with them; all obstacles get removed and all the best riches obtained to them. (41) If a lady listens to this Rāmāyaṇa from beginning with full devotion to Rāma even in her menstruation period she gives birth to a high grade son with long life and herself is respected in the world for her wifely chastity. (42) Those who adore this book with devotion and bid Praṇāma everyday, get freed from all sins and go to the supreme abode of lord Viṣṇu. (43) Those who listen to Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa in full or else recite it from their mouth earn the pleasure of Śrī Rāma. (44) Rāma himself is supreme Brahma if he, the oversoul of all, is pleased one gets what he desires out of Dharma, Artha, Kāma and Mokṣa. (45) This Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa capable of giving long life, good health, destroying sins accumulated in the crores of Kalpas should be listened to in full and regularly. (46) By hearing this Rāmāyaṇa, the manes get contentment, all gods, all planets, all Maharṣis are pleased. (47) Those who recite, write or hear this wonderful ancient Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa full of knowledge and dispassion, are not reborn in this world. (48) By churning the Vedas and Vedic knowledge again and again Lord Śiva reached this conclusion that Rāma, the liberating Mantra is the secret image of Viṣṇu. Therefore he communicated this secret truth of Lord Rāma (in the form of Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa) which is the gist of Vedic knowledge, to Bhagavatī Pāravatī. (49)

Hail to Rāma, the son of Daśaratha, the crown of Raghu dynasty, delighter of Kausalyā's heart, having lotus like eyes, the killer of ten-faced Rāvaṇa. (1)

Pārvatī said—After killing the demons like Rāvaṇa etc., what did Rāma, the delighter of Kausalyā and of terrific valour, do? (2) After having been coronated with Sītā on the throne how many years did he stay on earth in the illusory human form and played his sportive roles and then the eternal Paramātmā abandoned his human form and how? (3-4) O lord, narrate all this to me who am faithfully eager. After tasting the nectar of divine story my thirst has immensely increased. So, Lord, please narrate Rāmakathā in greater details. (5)

Śrī Mahādeva said—After annihilating Rākṣasas when Rāma was on the throne, all Munis came with the intention to greet him. (6) Viśvāmitra, Asita, Kaṇva, Durvāśā, Bhṛgu, Āṅgirā, Kaśyapa, Vāmadeva, Atri, the seven blemishless Rṣis and Agastya accompanied by his disciples and Munis came to the gate of Rāma's palace and told the door-keeper. (7-8) "Inform Rāma that the Munis headed by Agastya have come and are waiting outside. They wish to communicate their blessings and congratulate you." (9) Then the door-keeper instructed by Agastya quickly went to the Lord, saluted and spoke humbly. (10) His hands folded he said—O Lord, Agastya alongwith several Munis is waiting outside for your Darśana. (11) Rāma permitted the door-keeper to bring them in with proper respect and ease. Then the Munis after being properly worshipped entered the palace which was bedecked by a variety of gems. (12) Seeing the Munis coming Rāma swiftly got up with folded hands, offered them ablutions in a proper manner, donated cows to them (perhaps one each). (13) Saluting them Rāma offered fine seats as they deserved. Adored by Rāma Munis were pleased and took their seats. (14) Rāma made respectful enquiry regarding their wellbeing and they reciprocated in a befitting manner. The Munis enquired—"O mighty armed, O delighter of the Raghus, is everything alright everywhere in your kingdom"? (15) Luckily we are seeing you after you have vanquished your enemies O subduer of the foes. The extirpation of Rākṣasa king Rāvaṇa was not at all a difficult task for you. (16) You can conquer easily all the three worlds if you hold the bow. Any way It was lucky that you killed all the Rākṣasas such as Rāvaṇa etc. (17) It was not so difficult to kill Rāvaṇa O mighty armed, but the vanquishing of Meghanāda was certainly very very difficult. (18) The demons like Kumbhakarna etc., were a good match to the god of death and O best among the Raghus, you killed them with your arrows like Yama. (19) You had already given Dakṣiṇā in the form of granting fearlessness. Now (it is luck that) you are blessed and still alive after killing the demons in the battle. (20) Hearing the speech of those self-realised Munis Rāma was highly amazed and asked them with his hands folded—(21)

Side tracking demons like Rāvaṇa and Kumbhakarna who did conquer all the three worlds how is it so that you are praising Meghanāda? (22) Then hearing those words of Mahātmā Rāma the effulgent Agastya spoke to Rāma affectionately. (23) O Rāma, hearken everything about Indrajit and Rāvaṇa about their birth, their deeds and how they obtained boons—I am going to tell you briefly. (24) In the time of yore in Kṛtayuga there was one named Pulastya, the son of Brahmā. The wise and learned Pulastya went to practise penance by the side of Meru. (25) That best among the Munis made his residence in the hermitage of Tṛṇabindu. Always busy in the self study (of the Śāstras) he practised great penance. (26)

There, in that beautiful Āśrama the damsels of gods and Gandharvas started singing, dancing, laughing and playing instruments in order to disturb the penancing of Pulastya. All were flawlessly beautiful. Then the splendrous Pulastya angrily cursed. (27-28) Whosoever will come within my sight, will immediately conceive. Since then afraid of that curse they stopped coming to that area. (29) The daughter of Rājārṣi Tṛṇabindu by chance could not hear those words. So quite fearlessly she moved back and forth before him and looking at him. (30) She became pale and slowly her pregnancy became clear. Watching the paleness of her body she was frightened and went to her father. (31) The boundlessly effulgent Rājārṣi Tṛṇabindu watching his daughter meditated for a moment and came to know through his eyes of wisdom what Pulastya did. (32) Then the father proffered that girl to Pulastya and Pulastya accepted her saying alright. (33) The Muni Pulastya, pleased with her services, said—I will give you a son who will be glorifying both the families. (34) Then after maturity she gave birth to a son from Pulastya who became famous all over the world. Viśravā by name, the son of Pulastya, was a famous Muni the knower of Brahma. (35) Impressed by his nature and character the great sage Bharadwāja happily gave her daughter to Viśravā for his wife. (36) From Viśravā, a son venerable to the world was born to her. He was Vaiśravaṇa (Kubera) just like his father and admired by Brahmā also. (37) Pleased with his penances Brahmā granted him a good boon as desired by him. He appointed him as the superintendent of riches forever. (38)

After having the boon he came to his father to pay respect, in his capacity of the lord of riches, on the chariot—effulgent Puṣpaka given by Brahmā. (39) He saluted his father informed him of the fruit that he got from the penances and said—Brahmā granted me a fine boon but the supreme lord did not allot any place for my residence. Please now tell me the particular place for me quite free from violence of any type. (40-41) Viśrawā told him—"There is a very good town named Lanka built by Viśwakarmā for the residence of Rākṣasas. (42) Frightened from Viṣṇu all the Daityas entered Rasātala. The township Lanka is inaccessible for others as it is located inside the ocean. (43) Go there for your residence. It is un-occupied so far. So instructed by the father, Kubera went there and entered it. (44) With the approval of his father he lived there for a long time. Once upon a time a flesh eating Rākṣasa named Sumālī came from Rasātala and moved around on the earth with his daughter who was like a goddess in her beauty. (45-46) One day he saw Kubera flying in his Puṣpaka. The talented Sumālī thought over the benefaction of the Rākṣasas. (47) He said to her daughter Kaikasī—My child it is time for your marriage. Your youth is passing. (48) For the fear of being rejected by you the grooms don't court with you. It is better to accept this Muni a descendant in the family of Brahmā. May god bless you. (49) Then automatically you will get mighty and handsome sons like Kubera, O auspicious one. (50) "Very well" she said, went to his hermitage, stood before the Muni, looking on the ground and scratching the earth with her big toe. (51) The Muni asked her—"Who are you, O beautiful lady and whose daughter you are?" She replied with her hands folded—O Brahman, you should find it out yourself with a little meditation. (52) Then Viśravā meditated for a moment and knowing everything he said—"I know your desire. You want sons from me. (53) O lady with a beautiful waist, you have come at a very inauspicious time, so you will have two most hideous Rākṣasa sons." (54) She asked the Muni—"Even from you shall I have such sons?" Then the Muni said—"After the two the third son you have will be of great wisdom. (55) He will be a great devotee of lord and will be exclusively confined to the devotion of Rāma." Having been so said she gave birth at proper time to ten-shouldered Rāvaṇa with twenty arms and ten heads and terrific looking. Only on account of his birth the earth quaked. (56-57)

Many bad omens indicating complete destruction appeared and then Kumbhakarna was born like a big mountain. (58) Then Sūrpaṇakhā, the sister of Rāvaṇa and then came Vibhīṣaṇa calm and quiet and serene looking. (58-59) Vibhīṣaṇa was studious, taking limited food and observing daily routine as prescribed. Kumbhakarna, the dreadful one, moved around eating the well contented Brāhmaṇas and Rṣis. The mightiest Rāvaṇa also became a source of terror. He grew up for the destruction of the world just as a disease is the cause of destroying the body. (60-61)

O Rāma, you are seated in every heart and being omniscient you know thoroughly what is in the minds of all. You are the inner witness of all, ever effulgent and supremely taintless. You have assumed this illusory human guise. You yourself know your grandeur, you are never tainted with Māyā and its qualities. Today you request me to say something. Even though this also is your Līlā yet I will narrate the origin of this Rākṣasa as desired by you. (62) O Rāma, I take you to be the one without the second, endless, having powers beyond imagining, you are consciousness, imperishable, unborn and the supreme knowledge embodied. You keep your form and nature secret. By your grace I myself even though ignorant yet meditating upon you move quite freely. (63) After Agastya said so, Śrī Rāma, the fame of the solar dynasty embodied, smiled and said to Agastya—"This entire universe is Māyā. But since it is not different from me, so O Muni you should take it for granted that the chanting of my qualities is the only means to destroy all the sins in the world. (64)

Thus ends canto I of Uttarakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Canto II

Śrī Mahādeva said—Hearing the words of Śrī Rāma, the overjoyed Muni spoke in the court while everybody was hearing. (1) One day the lord of riches Kubera came on his Puṣpaka to see his father. He was in a hurry. (2) When the demoness Kaikasī saw the excessively effulgent and strong Kubera, she came to her son Rāvaṇa and spoke to him. (3) "My son, look at Kubera, the lord of riches. He is as if inflamed with his own splendour. You should also try your best to become like him." (4) Hearing this Rāvaṇa was enraged and immediately swore—Mother, very soon I will become just like him or even superior to him. Mother, look at me and give up worrying, O lady of fine vows. Having so said Rāvaṇa alongwith his younger brothers went to the holy place Gokarṇa to practise severe penance for getting his desire fulfilled. All the brothers following their own routine started severe penances which were terrible and capable of troubling all the worlds. Kumbhakarṇa practised penance for ten thousand years. (5—8)

The righteous and truthfully virtuous Vibhīṣaṇa stood on one foot for five thousand years. (9) Rāvaṇa observing complete fast for one thousand divine years practised penance. After the completion of one thousand years he poured oblation of his head into the fire. This way nine thousand years divine passed. (10) The tenth time after completing the tenth millennium when he was about to cut his tenth head, the Prajāpati appeared in person. "O my child Rāvaṇa, I am pleased" spoke the Prajāpati. (11) "Ask for the boon that you have in your mind" Hearing that the happy Rāvaṇa said—"O lord, I want immortality if you are pleased with me. I may not be subjected to death at the hands of Suparṇa, Nāga, Yakṣa, gods and demons. (I don't worry on account of human beings). They are just blades of grass to me. (12—13) "Be it so" said the Prajāpati and then he addressed Rāvaṇa—The nine heads that you have poured as oblation into the fire will again sprout up and will be indestructible O best among the demons. (14-15) Having so said to Rāvaṇa the Prajāpati turned to Vibhīṣaṇa and the lover of devotees told him who was bowing before him. "Vibhīṣaṇa my child, you have practised good penance with the rightful intention. Now ask for your desired boon. (16-17)

Vibhīṣaṇa saluted him and spoke with folded hands—"O lord, let me always be inclined to the righteousness. Let my intellect not relish the irreligion." (18) Then the pleased Prajāpati said to Vibhīṣaṇa—you are already religious my child and you will remain like that in future also. (19) I will grant you immortality also even though unasked, O Vibhīṣaṇa. Then he asked Kumbhakarna to ask for a boon. (20) Deluded by goddess Vāṇī, Kumbhakarna requested the Prajāpati—O lord, grant me sleep for six months and then taking food one day. (21) Brahmā looked at the gods in the sky and uttered—"Be it so". The moment he said so, Saraswatī came out from the mouth of Kumbhakarna and went to heaven. (22) The wicked Kumbhakarna thought sorrowfully—"What has come out of my mouth unintentionally? Or else it is just a stroke of providence." (23) When Sumālī came to know that his demon grandsons have been granted boons came out of Pātāla alongwith Prahasta etc.(24) He embraced Rāvaṇa and said—Luckily my child, my cherished desire has materialised today in the shape of you. (25) The cause of fear from Mahāviṣṇu which made us to leave Lanka and take refuge in Pātāla has disappeared today O mighty armed. (26) This Lanka presently occupied by Kubera was formerly in our possession. You must take it back from possession of your brother either peacefully or by force as the kings have neither a relative nor a friend. Rāvaṇa objected to this. He said you should not say like that. Kubera is elder to me and commands my respect. So hearing Prahasta quite humbly told Rāvaṇa. (27—29)

Listen to me attentively O Rāvaṇa. You should not say so. You have studied neither Rājadharmā nor the Nītiśāstra. (30) O lord, kindly listen to what I say. There is nothing like brotherliness with the warriors. The mighty gods and demons both are the offshoots of Kaśyapa. (31) Divorcing all sorts of friendliness they fiercely fought with each other using all sorts of weapons. The enmity initiated by gods O king, is not a recent happening. (32) Having heard the words of wicked Prahasta, Rāvaṇa agreed to it and he went to Trikuta mountain with his eyes red in anger. (33) He sent Prahasta as his envoy, expelled Kubera from Lanka, took possession of it and started living comfortably with his Rākṣasa ministers. (34)

The noble Kubera as advised by his father vacated Lanka, went to mount Kailasa and propitiated lord Śiva by penance. (35) Cultivating friendship with him and under his protection he got built Alka by Viśwakarmā. (36) There under the protection of lord Śiva he became a presiding deity of one particular quarter. This side the wicked Rāvaṇa was coronated by the Rākṣasas. He ruled the Rākṣasa kingdom while troubling all the three wrolds. That conjuring Rākṣasa gave his dreadful looking sister (Sūrpaṇakhā) to Vidyujjihva from Kālakhāṇja dynasty. Thereafter Maya, the Viśwakarmā of demons, the son of Diti gave him (Rāvaṇa) his daughter Mandodarī by name who was singularly beautiful in all the three worlds and he again gave an infallible Śakti with pleasure. (37—40) Thereafter, Rāvaṇa married Kumbhakarna with Vṛtrajwālā, the grand daughter (from the daughter's side) of Vairocana, who (Vṛtrajwālā) offered herself to him through her guardians. (41) Then Rāvaṇa managed for Vibhīṣaṇa for his wife the daughter of Gandharva king, the exalted Śailūṣa. She was very righteous and knower of Dharma. Her name was Saramā. She was beautiful and having all auspicious characteristics. After sometime Mandodarī gave birth to her son Meghanāda. He produced sound like clouds as soon as he was born. So people called him as Meghaṇāda more than once. (42—44) Then

Kumbhakarna said—O lord, I am feeling drowsy. And then a cave very big in length and breadth was built. (45) There the foolish Kumbhakarna slept snoring. After Kumbhakarna slept, Rāvaṇa, who was a cause of weeping to all the worlds, killed Brāhmaṇas, main Rṣis, gods, Dānavas and Kinnaras and serpents and he dispossessed the gods from their affluence. (46-47) When Kubera heard the atrocities perpetrated by Rāvaṇa, he advised him through his messenger not to do irreligious acts. (48)

Rāvaṇa was angered and attacked the township of Kubera. Defeating him he took his Puṣpaka, the best of the Vimānas. (49) Then he conquered Yama and Varuṇa in the battle and after that with the intention of killing Indra, he swiftly attacked Swargaloka. (50) There was a fierce fight between him and Indra alongwith the other gods and Indra arrested Rāvaṇa. (51) When Meghanāda heard this news the valorous warrior rushed, for a terrible fight, conquered the gods. He took hold of Indra. The mighty Meghanāda bound Indra with ropes, got his father released and came to his capital with the captive Indra. (52-53) Then Brahmā persuaded Meghanāda and got Indra released. He granted many boons as a token of exchange and went to his abode. (54) The victorious Rāvaṇa, conquering the worlds one by one went to Kailasa and lifted it on his arms which were similar to Parigha. (55)

Then Nandīśwara cursed this Rākṣasa king—Get destroyed by angry humans and monkeys. (56) Quite unmindful of this curse Rāvaṇa went to the Haihaya capital. There Sahasrārjuna arrested him and Pulastya himself somehow prevailed upon him and got Rāvaṇa released. (57) Then he went to the mighty Vāli, the best among the monkeys with intention to kill him. There Vāli captivated him under his armpit. In the same position Vāli made a round of all the four oceans. Vāli released him and then Rāvaṇa established friendship with him. (58-59)

Mighty Rāvaṇa was immensely pleased to have all the worlds under him and enjoyed rulership undivided. (60) So powerful were Rāvaṇa and Indrajit, who made the world cry, you killed Rāvaṇa out of the two. (61) And Meghanāda was killed by exalted Lakṣmaṇa and you yourself killed mountain like Kumbhakarna. (62) You are Nārāyaṇa in person who created the world for the first time. This entire mobile and immobile world is only your manifestation. (63) The great grand father of the universe Brahmā was born from the lotus that sprouted from your navel region. Fire god came out from your mouth accompanied by Vānī O best among the Raghus. (64) All the Lokapālas were born of your arms and moon and sun from your eyes. The quarters and corners came from your ears. (65) Prāṇas

(68) The medicinal herbs from your fine hairs over the body and the donkeys etc., from your nails. You are the pantheistic essence of the world, you are the Puruṣa equipped with the power of Māyā. (69) And so you appear like holding different forms when you assume the qualities of Māyā. On account of being supported by you the gods drink nectar in the sacrifices. (70) It is you who created the whole universe comprising mobiles and immobiles. And all of them are alive only on your account. (71) All objects of daily dealings are pervaded by you just as the ghee permeates in every drop of milk. (72) It is your luminosity that illumines sun etc., and not otherwise i.e., you are not illumined by sun etc. So one having the eyes of wisdom must see you eternally alone permeating everything. (73) One whose wisdom is covered by ignorance cannot see you just as a blind does not see the

sun. The Yogīs through the Upanishadic teachings superseding the non-souled objects seek for you in their body itself day and night. It is by a scintilla of devotion to your feet that the Yogīs are successful in realising you, the pure consciousness not otherwise. You are omniscient. I twitered something before you. You behove to pardon me for that O Deveśa, as I deserve your mercy. (74-76) I adore the Raghupati who is bereft of the factors like quarters, place and time, undifferentiated, one without the second, the pure consciousness, imperishable, unborn and bereft of activities like movements, omniscient, the overlord having unending qualities beyond Māyā and ever unseparated from his devotees. (3) Brahmā held those tears in his hand, made some meditation and then poured them. As soon as the tears touched the ground, a great monkey sprang out of that. (4) Brahmā told him, my child, live here with me for sometime in this beautiful vicinity you will get benefaction. (5) Having been so said that wonderful monkey lived there. After a long time passed one day that excessively wise monkey Rkṣarāja by name while he was moving on the mountain in search of fruits and roots, he saw a divinely beautiful pond full of water and studded with ruby rocks. (6-7) He came to drink water and saw therein a shadow monkey. Thinking that it was some antagonist monkey in the water he jumped into the water. (8) There he did not see the monkey inside the water so again he came up to surface and there he was very much amazed to find himself transformed into an exceptionally beautiful lady. (9) Once while Indra was going back after adoring Brahmā he saw in the midday time that beautiful woman. (10) He was struck with the arrows of Kāmadeva. His semen was discharged but it fell down on ground. (11) From thence Vāli was born as valorous as Indra himself. Indra gave him a garland of gold and went to Heaven. (12) At the same time the sun god also arrived there. He also was sexually agitated, discharged his semen at her neck. At once a huge bodied monkey was born of her. He appointed Hanumān in his service and went away. (13-14) Having two sons received she went somewhere and slept. In the morning when she woke up she again found herself in the form of a monkey. (15) After that the learned R̥kṣarāja alongwith his two sons taking some fruits and roots went to the court of Brahmā, saluted him and stood before him. (16)

Then Brahmā talked to and consoled him considerably and called for a Devadūta who was effulgent like god himself. (17) He said to the Devadūta—It is my order that you go alongwith this best of monkeys—R̥kṣarāja to the divine city Kiṣkindhā built by Viśwakarmā which is full of all riches, inaccessible even to gods. There consecrate this great monkey as king. (18-19) All the monkeys wherever they might be in the seven islands, who are invincible, will be subordinate to R̥kṣarāja hereafter. (20) When the eternal Nārāyaṇa himself appears on the earth in the form of Rāma in order to unburden the earth and annihilate Rākṣasas then will all the monkeys go for his help. Having been so instructed by Brahmā the supremely wise divine envoy coronated that monkey king as instructed by Brahmā. And then the Devadūta went to Brahmā and reported everything as had happened. (21–23) Since then Kiṣkindhā of the monkeys came under the protection of that monkey king. (24) Hey Rāma, you are the overlord of all. As requested by Brahmā you adopted the human form which is only illusory and you unburdened the earth. It was certainly not a big task for you who are permeating all beings, ever free, consciousness embodied, immutable and endless. Yet the saintly people describe your noble sports which you have done in the illusory garb of human being in order to destroy the sins of the whole world and to make it happy. One who chants the story of the birth of Vāli and Sugrīva will be freed from all the sins as he had taken shelter in you. (25–28)

Now I am going to tell you another Kathā related with you. It reveals the motive for which Rāvaṇa abducted Sītā. (29) Once before long in Kṛtayuga, O Rāma, Rāvaṇa went to Sanat Kumāra, the son of Prajāpati who was seated in seclusion. Rāvaṇa saluted him and most humbly requested. (30) Which of the gods is superiormost and strongest taking whose support the gods defeat their enemies in the battle. (31) Whom do the Brāhmaṇas worship always and Yogīs meditate upon? Please do speak to me. Since you are the best among the knowers of reply to all the questions. (32)

Sanatkumāra knew fully with the eyes of Yoga, what there was in his heart. Then he said to Rāvaṇa—"Now listen to me my son, I am going to tell you. (33) It is Hari, Nārāyaṇa, the immutable who sustains always the entire world; who is beyond birth and death and who is ever worshipped by gods as well as demons. (34) (It is Hari) from whose navel lotus was born Brahmā, the lord, lord of creators and who created the entire cosmos mobile and immobile. It is by taking refuge in him that gods defeat their enemies in battle and the Yogīs always mutter his name in Dhyānayoga. (35-36) Hearing the words of the great sage Rāvaṇa again said—"To what state do the Rākṣasas go after death when killed by Viṣṇu, O best among the Munis?" Then the best among the Munis spoke to Rākṣasa king Rāvaṇa. (37-38) Those who are killed by the gods get the most covetable heaven. But when the period of enjoyment comes to end, they are dislodged from there and are born on the earth. (39) There according to their deeds done in past lives (the virtues and sins) they die and are again born. But those who are killed by lord Viṣṇu, go to his supreme abode. (40) Hearing all this from the mouth of the Muni Rāvaṇa felt very happy and he started thinking how to wage war with Hari. (41) The great sage knew what was there in the mind of Rāvaṇa. He said—"My child what you desire will happen, there is no doubt. Wait for sometime and till then enjoy pleasure O Rāvaṇa." O mighty armed Rāma, having so said the Muni again spoke to him. (42-43)

Rāvaṇa, He is without form yet I will try to tell you the form of that wielder of Māyā. He is pervading all immobiles, all big and small rivers. (44) He is Om̐kāra, truth, Sāvitṛī and the earth Himself. He is also in the form of Śeṣa who is the base of the whole universe. (45) All gods, all oceans, Kāla, the sun and the moon, the sunrise, the day and night, Yama and Vāyu (all are his forms). (46) The fire god, the Indra, the death, the clouds, the Vasus, Brahmā, Rūdra etc., and all other gods are also only his form. (47) It is Viṣṇu, the eternal, imperishable who plays sportively. He Himself flashes like lightning, burns in the form of fire, protects the universe and eats it away and at the same time He alone creates it all. (48) He pervades the three worlds—mobile and immobile. His bodily hue is just like blue lotus and yellow garments like flash of lightning. (49) He is ever accompanied by His eternal spouse Lakṣmī of a hue of pure Gold, who is ever indistructible, always occupying a place in His left and is ever embraced by him. (50) No god, demon or serpent can see Him. Only he can have a vision on whom He showers His grace. (51) The Lord cannot be seen through sacrifice, charity penance or study of scriptures or any other means. (52) Lord Viṣṇu can be visualised only by those who are exclusively devoted; who always think of Him in their mind and heart; whose sins have been washed away, whose visionary faculty has been cleansed by the supreme Knowledge. (53) Or else, if you have a desire to see the lord, listen. In Tretā that Lord will manifest Himself in the form of the mighty king Śrī Rāma, the son of Daśaratha, in Ikṣvāku dynasty for the well-being of gods and human beings. (54-55) Under the instruction of His father, He, the righteous one, alongwith His brother and consort, the creating agency of the world and his Yogamāyā, will move around the Daṇḍaka forest. (56) This way I have narrated everything in detail. Rāvaṇa, you should always adore Him alongwith Lakṣmī with full devotion. (57)

Agastya said—Hearing so the demon king became introvert for a moment and did some thinking. He was happy to have decided to cultivate enmity with you. (58) Thereafter he made a trip throughout the world with the desire to have war. For the sake of being killed by you, the wise Rāvaṇa abducted Śrī Jānakī. (59) One who hears or reads this story or recites to those who are desirous of hearing it; will get a long life, a good health, the everlasting pleasure, desired object and inexhaustible riches. (60)

Thus ends canto III of Uttarakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātmā-Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—One day the sage Nārada was coming from the abode of Brahmā and Rāvaṇa was making a round of the world. He happened to see the sage, saluted him and said. (1) O Lord, tell me where I may find mighty warriors to fight with. How I wish to have a fight with some mighty person. Since you are omniscient, please tell me. (2) The sage thought for a while and said—"There is Śveta Dvīpa (white island). The inhabitants of this island are of great prowess and are huge bodied. Go you there, O wise one. (3) It is inhabited by only those who were formerly either the devotees of Viṣṇu gods and demons. (4) So hearing, Rāvaṇa with his ministers, Dvīpa. (5) Struck by the splendour of that island, Puṣpaka became powerless and could not move an inch. So Rāvaṇa left it and his ministers also and went alone. (6) As soon as he entered the island a woman caught him by hand and asked—

"Who are you? Where are you coming from and who did send you?" Speak. (7) Many women playfully asked him the same questions. They all laughed at him. The ten-mouthed Rāvaṇa could get himself freed from them with great difficulty. (8) The wicked was overawed and thought—"Certainly I will get Vaikunṭha if killed by Viṣṇu." (9) I will do something that will cause anger in Viṣṇu against me. Having so decided, the demon abducted Sītā in the forest. (10) He stole the daughter of Earth in full knowledge that you are supreme Lord and he looked after her like a mother, only desiring his demise at your hands. (11)

O Rāma, you are the Lord Supreme. You are omniscient and undifferentiated, You know all past, present and future with the eyes of knowledge, O Lord, in order to guide your devotees, You enact this drama. Even though You are adored by all the world, You appear to hear the preachings of Munis in your human form. (12) Having praised Rāma this way and receiving adorations offered by Rāma, the cheerful Agastya went back to his Āśrama with all the Munis. (13) Rāma, the spouse of Ramā, alongwith Sītā, His brothers and ministers, lived in the palace enjoying like an ordinary worldly man. (14) He enjoyed with his beloved Sītā all enjoyments even though being absolutely unattached. He was always accompanied by the righteous monkeys like Hanumān. (15) One day Puṣpaka again came to lord Rāma as it had come earlier and submitted—"Lord, Kubera has again sent me from there to you. (16)" Once Rāvaṇa forcefully possessed you. Then you have been reconquered by Śrī Rāma. So carry you always Him so long as He stays on the earth. (17) When the best of the Rāghus, goes to Vaikuṇṭha, then come to me." Hearing it Rāghava spoke to Puṣpaka, effulgent like sun—(18) "Come when I remember you. May God bless you. Now go as per my instruction and stay everywhere invisibly." (19)

So saying, Śrī Rāma looked after the state administration with the help of brothers and ministers following the norms of justice. (20) Under the rule of Śrī Rāma, the spouse of Ramā and the lord of the universe, the earth was full of crops and the trees laden with fruits. (21) Under the kingship of Rāma people were righteous, women were chaste and devoted to their husbands and nobody saw the death of his son. (22) Alongwith Sītā, brothers and chief monkeys, Rāma used to make round deeds on the earth, mounting in Puṣpaka. (23) He did suprahuman of a Brahmin boy. He saw the father overwhelmed with grief. He, the wisest among the wise, knew the reason and killed the Śūdra practising penance in the forest, brought the boy back to life and secured heaven to the Śūdra. The Paramātmā Rāma did it for the sake of guiding people. (24–26) He dotted the country with the Śiva Liṅgas installed from place to place and entertained Sītā also with superhuman and unearthly enjoyments. (27) The knower of Dharma, Rāma administered the kingdom according to Dharma, established His Kathā in the world which was capable of sanctifying all the world. (28) Rāma, whose lotus feet are adored by the world, ruled the country for ten thousand years in his illusory human form. (29) The sage among kings, strictly followed the vow of monogamy keeping Him always pure. He performed all household Yajñas (Grhyakarmas) just for the sake of setting example for the world. (30)

The good-natured Sītā could foresee the inclination of her husband. She always enchanted him through her servitude, loveful care, humility, restraint over her senses, bashfulness or even the sense of fear. (31) One day while Rāma and Sītā were in the pleasure garden furnished with all enjoyments, in a secluded chamber of the mansion, Rāma was seated leisurely. (32) His bodily hue was like sapphire. He was ornamented divinely. His face cheerful, tranquil, and the garments were shining as a heap of lightning flashes. (33) Sītā the lotus-eyed and bedecked with all ornaments, while shampooing His lotus-feet with her hands, submitted to Rāma—(34) O God of gods, O Lord of the world, O Supreme Soul, O eternal, O consciousness and bliss embodied, O devoid of beginning, middle and end,

O the cause of all. (35) O Deva, gods approached me in seclusion and they very much requested for your return to Vaikuṇṭha. (36) Rāma alongwith you—his conscious power, is staying on earth forsaking us and his eternal abode Vaikuṇṭha. (37) O universal Mother, Rāma the lotus-eyed, always lives with you. So please, go you first to Vaikuṇṭha and then Śrī Rāma will come and oblige us. So I have been solicited and I, on my part, submitted so to you. (38-39) So kindly do as you think fit, I do not order you. Hearing Sītā's words, Rāma thought for a moment and said. (40)

"O goddess, I know everything. Now I am telling you a plan. I will find out an excuse to scandalize you and then I will leave you in the forest pretending that I am afraid of public censure like any other man. There near the hermitage of Vālmīki you will give birth to two boys. (41-42) Now the symptoms of pregnancy are clear in you. After delivery you will again come back to Me and while swearing respectfully at once. Just after you are gone, I will certainly come. (43-44) So saying Rāma, the Embodiment of Knowledge, dismissed her and Himself was surrounded by the wise ministers and chieftains of the army. His well-wishers attended on Him.

Expert clowns were entertaining Him by their witty remarks. (45-46) During the course of conversation Rāma asked one spy named Vijaya—"What do the citizens of the capital and the countrymen talk about Me—good or bad? (47) Or about Sītā or My mothers, brothers or even Kaikeyī? Have no fear. Tell the truth. You are sworn by My name. (48) Having been so asked, Vijaya said—"Deva, everybody says that Rāma, the knower of the self, has done everything which was otherwise difficult. (49) But having killed Rāvaṇa, Rāma brought Sītā back paying no heed to the black side of it and entertained her in His palace. (50) The wicked Rāvaṇa abducted her in a deserted forest. What kind of pleasure Rāma must be getting in His heart in the company of Sītā? (51) Now we also have to overlook the slips of our womenfolk. Just as the King, so become the subjects. (52) Hearing it Rāma asked His nears and dears about it. They after saluting Rāma expressed their agreement that it was so undoubtedly. (53)

Then Rāma dissolved his meeting with the ministers, well-wishers and Vijaya and called for Lakṣmaṇa and said—"I am greatly scandalized on account of Sītā." "The very morning take Sītā near the Āśrama of Vālmīki by chariot, leave her there and come back soon. If you put any protest, it will be like killing me." (54-56) Having been so said, Lakṣmaṇa got terrified. He woke up in the morning, got Sītā mounted in the chariot through Sumantra and started for the forest. (57) Leaving her near Vālmīki's Āśrama," he said to her—"Due to the fear of public scandal, Rāma has abandoned you in the forest. (58) I am not at fault O mother! Now better go to the Āśrama of the Muni" So saying Lakṣmaṇa swiftly returned to Rāma. (59) Sītā extremely pained, wept bitterly as she was at her wit's end. Vālmīki when heard of it through his disciples he knew at once through his divine vision that it was Sītā. (60) He entertained her by offering oblations etc., and consoled Sītā. Knowing of all futurity he handed her over to the ladies in the Āśrama. (61) The womenfolk there, having come to know from Muni that Sītā was no other than Lakṣmī, the consort of Paramātmā, respected and served her day by day with all humility and veneration. (62) Here Rāma also who was Paramātmā Himself, having eyes of knowledge, enjoyments. An accute dispassion prevailed on Him and He, whose lotus-feet are adored by Munis, adopted vow of Munis. (63)

Thus ends canto IV of Uttarakāṇḍa, in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said— After that Lord Rāma, the best of the Raghus, who established His glorious fame in the form of Rāmāyaṇa for the well-being of the world through His divine and auspicious body, acted according to the norms established by the ancient Rājarsis. (1) At times requested by the highly talented Lakṣmaṇa, He used to narrate ancient propitious stories. Once Rāghava narrated the story of King Nṛga who, due to a slip on his part, was cursed by a Brāhmaṇa and fell into subhuman womb. (2)

One day Lord Rāma whose lotus-like feet Lakṣmī adores, was in a secluded place when Lakṣmaṇa in all good faith, with all humility, requested Him after offering his Praṇāma with devotion. (3) O, the wisest, You are the very soul of all embodied beings, the only ruler of the universe and yet You Yourself are formless. You are the subject of vision only to those Jñānīs who are fond of company with the great Bhāgavatas who are just like bees to Your lotus-feet. (4) O Lord, I take refuge in Your lotus-feet, always meditated upon by Yogīs and capable of liberating from the world. You behave to teach me in such a way, that I may easily cross the quagmire of ignorance. (5) Hearing these words of Lakṣmaṇa, Śrī Rāma, the remover of devotees' woes, the gem among the kings, tranquil of mind, taught him the knowledge (Vijñāna) advocated by the Vedas that was for removing the darkness of ignorance. (6)

One should start with the observance of one's Varṇāśrama Dharma and when he feels that his inner senses are now purified, he must give them up. Thereafter equipped with proper means, he should approach a Sadguru for attaining Self-realization. (7) Karma is regarded as the cause of the body (birth). Those Karmas may be virtuous and sinful both as done by infatuated persons. They produce Dharma and Adharma respectively. The Dharma and Adharma both result in acquiring another body. This way the wheel of birth and death goes on rotating. (8) Ignorance is the root cause of Samsāra and its abandonment is the only cure. Only Vidyā is capable of destroying ignorance, not the Karma because Karma being a product of ignorance can neither remove ignorance nor can it destroy Karma itself. (9) Through Karma neither ignorance can go nor can the attachment be destroyed. Therefore (ततः—हि दोषेण धूमेनाग्निरिवावृताः) since rebirth is the inevitable result of Karma. Therefore a wise person must go for Jñāna. (10)

If somebody says that Vedas do prescribe to do Karma and side by side they recognise Vidyā as means of Puruṣārtha (Mokṣa). How to reconcile these two contrary things? It is this way—Vedas enjoin action for every being since ultimately they become a causative factor to attain Vidyā (By doing all actions concerned with Nitya and Nimitta the striver purifies himself and after that he becomes qualified to attain Vidyā). (11) Since Vedas declare that not doing action also has demerits. Therefore a striver attempting for Mokṣa should always do Karma. If somebody says that Vidyā in itself, without the help of the Karma is competent to provide Mokṣa and it does not require any other helping agency—(12) Well, it is not correct as the Vedic rituals, being सत्यकार्य (Mokṣa giving) yet require other subsidiary instrumental agencies similarly even though Vidyā is quite an independent factor for Mokṣa, yet it succeeds only when it is supported by the performance of enjoined Karmas. (13)

Such type of fallacious logic is incorrect. If it is wrong to say that Karma could be conducive to Mokṣa then it is also wrong to say that Vidyā assisted by Karma is the cause of Mokṣa. Because both are mutually falsifying each other. Karma emanates from assuming the body as one's own self and Vidyā comes after the ego vanishes. (So Vidyā and Karma cannot live together). (14) The supreme self-containment illuminated by pure self knowledge is called Vidyā. Moreover Karma requires so many Kāraṅkas (instrumental agencies) for its completion whereas Vidyā is the killer of so-called Kāraṅkas. (15) Therefore the wise must abandon every Karma with no exception whatsoever. Since Karma is opposite to Vidyā so the combination of the two is an impossibility. The wise must always be investigating, contemplating and meditating after getting himself completely detached from the senses and their objects. (16) One should perform the prescribed actions till he assumes his identification with his body due to Māyā. But by repeated practising of the Upanishadic Mahāvākyas like Neti, Neti etc., he must discard the wrong assumption and after realising the self must give up all Karmas. (17) When the effulgent knowledge dawns it removes the difference between Paramātmā and Jīvātmā, then only Māyā, the cause of Samsāra disappears alongwith all its instrumental agencies. (18) According to the Vedas if Māyā is once destroyed, it can never reactivate in the future. Since the supreme truth is unalloyed knowledge absolutely pure and one without the second, so after it is realised Avidyā cannot exist. (19) If after getting destroyed, Avidyā cannot be reborn, then there will be no such egoistic feeling of any doership. Therefore it is proved that Vidyā is independent requiring nothing else and it is self-sufficient for Mokṣa. (20)

The Taittirīya declaration—‘न कर्मणा न प्रजया धनेन त्यागेनैकं अमृतत्वमानुः’ (Taitt. Āraṇ. X. 10) clearly says that it is better to give up any and every action and at the same time Vājaśaneyi-Śākhā version—‘एतावदरे खल्वमृतत्वम्’ (Bṛh. Up. IV. 5. 15) advocates that knowledge is the means of salvation and not action. (21) That comparing Yajña (Karma) with Vidyā as some people say, is again wrong because firstly their results are different and secondly Yajña requires many instrumental agencies to perform it whereas Vidyā is contrarily independent. (22) “I will be committing an error by abandoning Karma” this type of thinking is some sort of infatuation towards non-soul. It is entertained by only the fools and not the wise. Therefore the wise ones who have their soul beyond the range of mutation, must abandon even the prescribed Karma and performed in a prescribed manner. (23)

A striver with his mind purified, having faith in the grace of Guru and through the constant practice of the Mahāvākyas like तत्त्वमसि by realising the identification of Jīvātmā and Paramātmā should be happy and unshakably steady like mountain Meru. (24) It is universally common that before knowing the meaning of a sentence we should know the meaning of the ingredient words perfectly and scientifically. “त्” and “त्वम्” these two objects are indicator of Paramātmā and Jīvātmā

and "असि" is the factor identifying the two. (25) Ātmā is taken to be of two types—Pratyagātmā (Jivātmā) and Parokṣātmā (Paramātmā). If the jivahood of Jivātmā and supremeness e.g., Parama from Paramātmā is minussed then there remains only Ātmā which is pure consciousness by nature and one without the second. This in poetical philosophy is called Bhāgalakṣaṇā (भागलक्षणा) that is giving up a portion and holding the other. A striver should realise the oneness of these two Ātmās through the process of Bhāgalakṣaṇā and their form also as pure consciousness. He should assume himself to be that pure Ātmā and should feel that he is himself the same one without the second. (In the Anubhūti Vākyas like सोऽहम् the same Bhāgalakṣaṇā is operative.) (26) In the Vākya तत्त्वमसि there are two different and unrelated words 'तत्' and 'त्वम्'. These two are not one so 'अजहल्लक्षणा' is not possible similarly they are really one and the same so जहल्लक्षणा cannot be operative. In 'सः' and 'अयम्' through Bhāgalakṣaṇā relinquishing the 'thatness' of 'सः' and 'thisness' of 'अयम्' what remains, is the pure existence. So there will be no fault in the application of Bhāgalakṣaṇā in order to realise the oneness of Jīva and Brahma. (27) (Indian philosophy accepts five gross elements—the earth, the water, the fire, the wind and the ether—to be ingredients of the gross organic bodies. But these gross elements are the result of the five subtle elements. When these subtle elements are proportionately mixed together they assume gross form. For example earth comes out of one half of the earth itself and one eighth of the other four elements and so on. This process is philosophically known as Pañcīkaraṇa and the gross elements are all Pañcīkṛta elements). This body having a beginning and an end, is the result of the deeds done in the past, quite illusory, the experiencing ground for pleasure and pain, a combination of five Pañcīkṛta elements is the gross guise of the Ātmā. (28) The subtle body e.g., mind, intellect, ten organs (sensory and motor), five vital airs which are born of non Pañcīkṛta subtle elements and are instrumental to experiencing pleasure and pain by the person is the second body of Ātmā. (29) The third Upādhi (body) is the causal body which is illusory and therefore beginningless and undescribable. Since the Ātmā is altogether different from these Upādhis so the striver should establish himself (the Ātmā) in the Ātmā itself. (30) This Ātmā when moves in different sheaths like अन्नमय etc., it looks identical with them just like a crystal assumes the colour of the nearby object. But after deep thinking it proves to be quite unattached and unborn since it is one without the second. (31) The wakefulness, dream and the deep slumber are the three states of the intellect which is a combination of the three modes of Māyā. They are mutually absent in each other (wakefulness does not allow dreaming and sleeping and so on) so they are non-existent so far as eternal and supreme Brahma, the Śiva is concerned. (32) Being the combination of body, sense, vital airs, mind and the conscious Ātmā, the functioning tendencies of intellect go on always changing. Since this tendency is born of the Tamoguna, is in the form of ignorance and till this tendency continues the cycle of birth and death goes on. (33) Constantly practising and realising the purport of the Vedic sayings like Neti Neti the striver should try to eliminate all the worldly objects and should taste in his heart the nectar of the supreme consciousness solidified and reject the entire world after having tasted Brahma as the essence of it just as people drink the water from coconut and throw the skull. (34) The Ātmā never dies nor it is born; it never decays nor does it grow nor is it renewed. It is bereft of all attributes, the bliss personified, self luminous, all pervading and one without the second. (35)

The Ātmā is the knowledge and bliss embodied. Then how does this sorrowful world seem to appear in it? It is because of ignorance, superimposed on the pure Ātmā. When the knowledge dawns it disappears within no time as there is a contrast between knowledge and ignorance. (36) When due to the misconception something appears to be something different, the wise ones call it Adhyāsa (superimposing). Just as a snake in the Īśwara this world simply appears. (37) The Brahma is the supreme cause of all, immutable, one without the second, quite attributeless, beyond the range of Māyā and pure consciousness. In it for the first time Ahaṁkāra is imposed. This imposition is itself Adhyāsa. (38) It is due to the tendency of intellect in the form of desires, attachment, pleasure etc., that in the supreme Ātmā Saṁsāra appears. As in the state of deep slumber these so-called intellectual tendencies are absent then the Ātmā appears in its self-luminous and blissful form. (39) Buddhi is an evolute of beginningless Avidyā. When in this Buddhi the luminosity of the conscious element is reflected, this luminous reflection is known as Jiva. Since Ātmā is spectator of Buddhi so it always stands separate from it and that Ātmā when it is quite unattached with Buddhi is verily the Paramātmā. (40) When Cidābhāsa, the witness soul and the intellect (the reflection of the soul on the Citta is Cidābhāsa) are in close proximity they appear (though wrongly) to assume each other's characteristics e.g., Ātmā, the sentient appears to be insentient and Buddhi assumes the sentience of Ātmā like heated red iron piece where iron assumes the heat of the fire and fire assumes the shape of the iron. (41) Through the preceptorial teachings and the study of Vedic lores when one realises the self knowledge then he visualises the attributeless Ātmā in his heart. In this stage he should go on rejecting the non-soul objects like body etc., which otherwise appear to be sentient Ātmā itself. (42) (The striver should feel) I am light, I am unborn, I am one without the second. I appear in my effulgence more than once. I am extremely taintless. I am pure knowledge solidified. I am immutable, I am perfect bliss and I am actionless. (43) I am everfree containing unimaginable power, beyond the senses, I am knowledge itself, beyond mutation, uncrossable. The wise expert in Vedas meditate upon me in their heart day in and day out. (44) This way when the striver is always absorbed in unbroken meditation about Ātmā, his inner senses are immensely purified and they immediately vanquish Avidyā alongwith all its Kāraṇas (the instrumental factors for rebirth) just like the Rasāyana (potentised medicine) kills the disease when taken properly. (45) The striver should select a secluded place and there he should sit after diverting his sense-organs from their objects and fully controlling the inner senses; being firmly established in the Ātmā should reject all the so-called means, with absolutely purified mind he should concentrate on Ātmā only through his inner eyes. (46) 'This world is the manifestation of Paramātmā'—realising this fact the striver should merge all this in the Ātmā the primal cause of all manifestations. He, who gets himself established in his conscious and blissful nature, loses all awareness both from within and without. (47) Prior to the state of Samādhi the striver should hold that the world—mobile and immobile—is only Omkāra. That is the object of expression and Pranava is its signifler. The world appears only due to the ignorance. In the light of the real knowledge it is only non-existent. (48) The ingredient 'अ' is the manifested word (wakeful condition). (In this the Jīva has all the three Upādhis) 'उ' is known as 'तैजस' Jīva (dreaming state—Jīva having only two Upādhis). 'म' is known as Prājñā (deep slumber having only one Upādhi of Avidyā). But all this is concerned with the state before Samādhi. They are only apparant; not real. (49) (The gross and wakeful) Puruṣa represented by 'अ' should be merged with the Taijasa 'उ' and then the Taijasa (dreaming and subtle state) should be merged in the last letter of Pranava e.g., 'म' (having one Upādhi that of Avidyā, deep slumber). (50) Then the striver should merge even this 'म' (the causal one) in the pure consciousness solidified e.g., Ātmā. Then the striver should strengthen the feeling that he himself is ever free, the knowledge personified, attributeless, taintless and supreme Brahma. (51) In this way always musing that (He is Paramātmā Himself) he becomes self contented and forgets the entire visible manifestation. Then he becomes absolutely liberated, always transmitting the spiritual bliss and quite tranquil like an ocean with waveless waters. (52) He, who constantly practises Samādhiyoga, all sense perceptions of whose have been vanished and who has defeated all his internal enemies like lust and anger etc., it is such a Mahātmā who always perceives me directly. (53) In this way constantly meditating on Ātmā, the Muni should always be free from all sorts of bondages. He should give up the idea of doership, ownership etc., and only reap the consequences of his Prārābdha. Such a Yogī directly merges in me. (54)

Fully realising this fact that the world in its beginning, middle and end is the sole cause of fear and grief, the striver should give up all the prescriptions of Vedas and adore his Ātmā. That is the supreme soul of the entire universe. (55) Just as the water in the ocean, milk in the milk, limited ether in its cosmic form and wind in the wind, when mixed, become one, similarly this Jīva when experiences the identification of the universe with his Ātmā, he becomes one with me e.g., Paramātmā. (56) The Muni even though living in the world must never forget that the world is unreal. Its identity cannot be proved either through the Vedic declarations or arguments or the Pramāṇas. It is something like seeing moons more than one out of the real one or the disorientation of the directions (दिग्भ्रम). (57) Until the striver is not able to feel that the entire universe is only my expansion and pervaded by me, he must continue my adoration single mindedly. One who has perfect faith and exalted devotion to me he can always have my vision day and night in his heart. (58) O dear, I have narrated to you that which is guarded secret and the very essence of all the Vedic lores. The wise man who always thinks of and ponders over this, is immediately freed from heaps of sins. (59) My brother, whatever this world is as it is perceived, is all Māyā. Push it out of your heart purifying your inner senses through contemplating on me. Be happy, blissful and free from misery. (60) Who adores me, the attributeless, sometimes beyond the range of Guṇas and sometimes my form with attributes; he is my own self and like sun he sanctifies all the three worlds with the dust of his feet. (61) Whatever I said is the real knowledge and essence of all the Vedas. Apart from this there is no other knowledge. It is chanted by me whose feet can be realised only through Vedānta. One who recites it faithfully and with due devotion to his preceptor assumes my own form if he has faith and devotion in my words. (62)

Thus ends canto V of Uttarakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Śrī Mahādeva said—One day a number of Munis abiding on the banks of Yamunā came to have an interview with Rāma, suppressed by the demon Lavaṇa. (1) Those innumerable Brāhmaṇas having Cyavana, the descendant of Bhṛgu as their foreman, arrived with the expectation of their security from Rāma. (2) The best among Raghu dynasty, duly adored those Brāhmaṇas with supreme devotion and spoke in very sweet words cheering the Munis. (3) O seniormost Munis, I will certainly do what you say, please tell me the reason of your arrival. I am blessed as you have come to see me out of affection. (4) Even if your desired task is extremely difficult, I will do it. Simply order me, your servant, as Brāhmaṇas are divine deities to me. (5) Hearing that, Cyavana was instantly happy and said—"In the ancient Satayuga O lord, there was a great demon Madhu. He was exceptionally religious and worshipping of gods and Brāhmaṇas. Propitiated by his penances lord Mahādeva gave his unique spear to him. (6-7) He said—Whomsoever you will strike with this, he will be burnt to ashes. It is said that the younger sister of Rāvaṇa—Kumbhīnasī was his wife. (8) She gave birth to the mighty valorous demon named Lavaṇa who was extremely wicked, difficult to subdue and torturer of gods and Brāhmaṇas. (9) Tortured by him O Rājendra, we have come to take shelter under you. Hearing that the Rāghava consoled those Munis and told them not to have any fear on that account. (10) "I will get Lavaṇa killed. Do you all go back quite carefree". Telling them so Rāma asked his brothers—who will kill him and provide them security from that Rākṣasa? Hearing that Bharata with folded hands requested Rāma. (11-12)

O Lord, permit me, I will kill him. Then Śatrughna saluted Rāma and submitted. (13) "O Rāghava, in the Lankan war Lakṣmaṇa performed a herculian task. The wisest Bharata living an ascetic life in Nandigram suffered a lot. (14) (It is now my turn) I alone will go for slaying Lavaṇa. O best of the Raghus, by your grace I am sure to kill that demon in the battle. (15) Hearing this Rāma, the vanquisher of enemies took Śatrughna in his embrace and said—"Today itself I will coronate you on the throne of Mathura. He got the necessary articles for coronation, brought by Lakṣmaṇa and coronated the unwilling Śatrughna. (16-17) Rāma gave Śatrughna a divine arrow and said to him—kill through this arrow that demon Lavaṇa who is a source of pain like a thorn to the entire world. (18)

Lavaṇa worships that spear, keeps it secure in the house and then goes to the forest for eating the animals and killing the various creatures. (19) While he is away in the jungle and does not come back; at that very time you should stand at the gate of the town with the bow in your hand. (20) Lavaṇa when comes back, will fight with you angrily and then he will be killed. After killing that crooked Lavaṇa build a city named Madhupuri after the name of that forest and stay there as per my instructions. You may go first and kill that Rākṣasa. After that five thousand horses, chariots half of that in number, six hundred elephants and infantry of thirty thousand in strength will follow you. (21–23) So saying Rāma smelt him on his head and despatched Śatrughna. He himself and the *Muni*s offered their blessings and adored him. (24) Śatrughna also did as advised by Rāma. He killed Lavaṇa, the son of Madhu in the battle and built the town named Mathura. (25)

He donated to some while honoured the others. Through these tactics he made Mathura a prosperous town. On the other side Sītā in the Āśrama of Vālmīki gave birth to two sons. (26) Muni Vālmīki named the elder as Kuśa and the younger as Lava. Gradually both the sons of Sītā acquired all the Vidyās. (27) (At the proper time) the Muni performed their ceremony of investiture with the sacred thread and then they started learning Vedas. The Muni taught the entire Rāmāyaṇa to both of them. (28) Formerly lord Śaṅkara, the destroyer of three cities, taught Rāmāyaṇa to Pārvalī in the time of yore. The capable Muni (Prabhu) handed over the same Rāmāyaṇa to them for strengthening and expanding the Vedic knowledge. (29) The two Kumāraṣ handsome like Aświnīkumāraṣ moved around the forest singing the Rāmāyaṇa with proportionate notations, tones and rhythms playing on the lute. Whenever they sang the Rāmāyaṇa in the gathering of Munis, the Munis were amazed to see the two godly boys singing like that and they talked to each other. (30-31) We, the immortalised Munis, have visited every quarter for a long long time but we have never come across such grandeur of vocal and instrumental music. Even though we have heard music from Gandharvas and Kinnaras; on the earth or heaven, in the temples, in the Pātāla, in the abode of Brahmā and in all the worlds but we have never known or seen or heard such music in such a grand way. (32)

This way everyday being praised by them and in the company of those Munis the two lived for a considerably long time in the Āśrama of Vālmīki. (33) Now the effulgent Rāma alongwith golden statue of Sītā performed the sacrifices like Aśwamedha involving huge amount of sacrificial fee. (34) All the royal sages, Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas and many Rṣis arrived there eager to see the sacrifice. (35) Vālmīki also having in his company the two singer boys Kuśa and Lava came to where the arrangements were made for ascetics to stay. (36) There in a secluded place when Muni Vālmīki awoke from Samādhi and was sitting calm and quiet, Kuśa asked during the course of Kathā about Jñānāsāstra. (37) My lord, I wish to hear from you in brief all about the birth and rebirth and the bondage of Ātmā—how is it bound so strongly. (38) How is the Ātmā liberated from the strong shackles named as Samsāra? O Muni, I am your disciple and you are omniscient so you behave to teach me. (39) Vālmīki said—Now listen to me. I am going to tell you in brief the nature and form of bondage and liberation and the means of liberation. Hearing it from me, act according to what I advise you. May god bless you. Following this line you will become Jivanmukta. This body itself is a great palace for the Ātmā that is the consciousness itself. There the Ahaṁkāra is the Minister appointed by Ātmā itself. This Ahaṁkāra as minister superimposes the identity of body and house etc., in the sentient Ātmā. (It is the Ahaṁkāra) which has affinity with the insentient body etc., on one hand and on the other imposes itself on the Ātmā. It becomes one with the Ātmā and then makes the Ātmā responsible for whatever it (Ahaṁkāra) does. Having been pervaded by that Ahaṁkāra the Ātmā becomes inspired by the Samkalpa of Ahaṁkāra and is bound with the same fetters of Samkalpa and then always gets busy in making resolves and counter resolves about son, wife, house etc. (40—44) Due to his worldly resolves the Jīva always grieves. This Ahamkāra has three aspects—inferior, ordinary and superior (Tāmasa, Rājasa and Sāttvika). (45) The three Guṇas form the basic cause of the sustenance of the world. Through the Tāmasika resolves the Jīva always performs Tāmasika actions. (46) With the result the Jīva becomes extremely Tāmasika and goes to the subhuman species like worms and insects; with the Sāttvika Samkalpa the Jīva becomes inclined towards Dharma and knowledge and abides quite happily not far from the kingdom of Mokṣa. With the Rājasika Samkalpa the Jīva performs all worldly transactions, is occupied with his worldly relations like son and wife etc. O talented one, he who abandons all the three types of resolves reaches the supreme abode when his Citta is finally merged in Ātmā. Therefore giving up all angles of thought, controlling by the mind itself destroy all your resolves either outer or inner. O sinless one, if you practise severe penances for thousands of years living wherever, either in Pātāla, earth or heaven; you will not find any other way for salvation apart from desroying your Samkalpa (resolves). (47—52) Therefore try your best to obliterate all the worldly resolves and only then it will be possible to achieve that most sanctifying ultimate bliss which is bereft of all troubles and mutations. (53) All the worldly objects are threaded in the string of Samikalpa (resolve). O sinless one, if the thread is cut asunder all the worldliness, birth and rebirth etc., simply evaporate unknowingly. (54) Abandoning all worldly resolves behave in a quite detached manner and do whatever comes to you. When the resolves come to an end the Jiva spontaneously attains Brahmahood. (55) Acquire Paramārtha (the supreme object) and abandon forcibly the entire Vikalpas (body, house, relations etc.) or else abandoning resolves and counter resolves; merging all your thought-waves into the supreme reality, achieve that Brahmahood which is one without the second for permanent bliss. (56)

Thus ends canto VI of Uttarakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

Canto VII

Kuśa and Lava chant Rāmāyaṇa in sacrifice performed by Rāma—Sītā enters into the rift provided by the earth and Rāma teaches knowledge to his mother

Śrī Mahādeva said—After having been preached by Vālmiki the confusion of Kuśa disappeared. He was freed from within and outwardly behaving like an ordinary man moved around. (1) Vālmiki asked the two talented sons of Sītā to roam about in the streets of the town here and there while chanting Rāmāyaṇa. (2) If Rāma wants to listen to their music, they were instructed to sing before him but if Rāma tried to give some present, they were not to accept it. (3) This way inspired by Vālmīki they started singing and roamed here and there. They gave performance of their music wherever the Muni wanted them to. (4) Then the descendant of Kakutstha, Rāma, heard the news of the two boys singing his past exploits here and there. He had a sense of curiosity aroused in him to hear that; the manner of recitation by the two boys was somewhat unique and wonderful and they observed successfully all laws of music. Therefore in the interval period of the sacrifice the king called and invited the kings, the pandits who were expert in Vedic lores, the Puranic scholars, the expert grammarians and the elderly Brāhmaṇas. (5-7) After they all gathered, the king invited the two musicians. Those kings and Brāhmaṇas etc., cheerfully looked at from Rāma to the two boys with the unwinking eyes. (They were amazed to mark the striking similarity of features between Rāma and the boys.) These are so similar to Rāma. The duplication. Exactly as the reflexion of an object in the mirror. If they did not have the matted locks of hair and the bark garment, (they will look just like Rāma). (6-10) We fail to find any difference between Rāghava and these two. While the surprised audience was saying such things the two Muni Kumāras prepared themselves to perform the music and then came the sweet melodious music of Gandharvas and it was certainly superhuman. (11-12) It was afternoon when Śrī Rāma having heard the sweet music asked Bharata—'Present them with ten thousand gold sovereigns.' (13) While they were being awarded they politely refused to accept it. They said—We are used to eat the product of forests (beets and roots) O king. What have we got to do with the gold? This way leaving the awarded money they went to Muni Vālmīki. Having heard his own exploits Śrī Rāma was amazed. (14-15) Knowing for certain that they were the sons of Sītā he asked Śatrughna, Hanumān, Suṣeṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa and Aṅgada. (16) Bring in the great souled Muni Vālmīki, the best of the Munis, the lord, very much godly, alongwith Sītā. (17) Let Sītā swear before this assembly to prove her chastity and sinlessness. Let everybody know that Sītā is sinless. (18)

Hearing those words all were amazed and went to Sītā. The courtiers of Śrī Rāma informed Vālmīki of what Śrī Rāma said. (19) Vālmīki knew what Śrī Rāma felt in his heart and said—'Sītā will present herself before the assembly tomorrow and take her oath.' (20) There is no doubt that the husband is the only deity to the woman. Hearing this proclamation they all went back and reported everything to Rāma. Rāma also hearing the message of Muni said—"Let all the Munis and kings hear and let the public witness the swearing of Sītā and judge by themselves the purity or impurity of Sītā." Having been so said by Rāma all the people, Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, Sūdras, the great sages and the monkeys were all curious not to miss the opportunity to see. (21–24) Then the Muni followed by Sītā soon came. The Muni was heralding and Sītā with her downcast eyes—followed. (25) She had her hands folded, the throat choked with tears and she entered the sacrificial canopy. They saw her as if Lakṣmī followed Brahmā, so was Sītā following Vālmiki. There was an uproarious greeting. Then Vālmiki, the best of Munis, entered into the crowd. Sītā was with him. Vālmiki said to Rāma—"O Rāma, it is Sītā of virtuous vows strictly religious and sinless deserted by you in the vicinity of my Āśrama in the forest as you were afraid of public censure. (26–29) Now Sītā will prove her credence. Accord permission to her. These two are the sons of Sītā born as twin. (30) They are your sons—both invincible; I am telling you the fact. I am tenth son of Brahmā O Rāghava. (31) I do not remember that I have ever spoken a lie and (I tell you) they are your sons. I have practised severe penance for many many years. I swear that I may not reap the fruit of penances if Sītā is unchaste in any way. Having been so said by Vālmīki Rāma made reply. (32-33)

It is exactly so as you of virtuous vows, and the wisest one, say. I am fully convinced by your sinless words. (34) In Lanka also Vaidehī presented irrefutable proof of her chastity in the presence of gods with the result I let her enter the palace. (35) It is same Sītā even though quite sinless and chaste was abandoned by me for the fear of public censure. Kindly pardon me for that. (36) I know these Kuśa and Lava are my own sons. Let there always be my love for the chaste Sītā in the world (37) Gods also—all of them—knowing the intention of Rāma came there thousands in number led by Brahmā. They were all curious and eager. (38) A huge number of citizens also happily gathered there. Sītā in a silken saree facing north with down cast eyes stood with folded hands. (39)

'If I have never thought of any other person apart from Rāma, let the mother earth give me space. (40) While Sītā so swore a very strange thing happened. A very divinely resplendent shining like sun and held by divinely built elephants. There on that throne the goddess earth having Jānakī within her arms full upto the brim with affection welcomed her and seated her on the throne. While Vaidehī on the throne was going to

Rasātala : there was a shower of divine flowers on her with uproarious greeting sounds from gods. Everything was very unearthly. (41—44) The gods in the intermediary region talked among them about this incident. All the mobiles and immobiles in the sky or on the earth, the huge bodied monkeys became—some of them worried while others thoughtful and still others meditative on account of the swearing of Sītā. (45-46) Some of them looked at Rāma while others at Sītā as if they were hypnotised. For sometime everyone of them was silent and perhaps without any feeling. (47) Watching the entrance of Sītā into the earth the entire world was stunned. Even though Rāma was aware of the importance of his future plan, yet like an unknowing person expressed his sorrow and grief for Jānakī. Brahmā alongwith the Ṛṣis consoled Rāma. (48-49) Rāma as if awakened from dream performed the remaining actions of sacrifice and bade goodbye to Ṛṣis and Ṛtviks who were there for the purpose. (50)

He propitiated them by donating plenty of wealth and gems to them and then the lord came to Ayodhya alongwith his two sons. (51) Since then Rāma lost every interest in any enjoyment. He became excessively introvert and used to be in seclusion. (52) One day while Rāma was absorbed in meditation in a secluded place, Kausalyā of sweet tongue, knowing him to be

Nārāyaṇa in person, approached him with devotion and after saluting him she asked in a cheerful disposition—"O Rāma, you are the beginning of the universe and yourself devoid of beginning, middle and end. (53-54) You are Paramātmā, supreme bliss, perfect and the overlord. It was my immense virtue that you took birth from my womb. (55) O best of Raghus, today when my life is coming to end and your earthly sojourn too, it is high time (to remove my ignorance) as the shackles of the world born of ignorance have not yet been removed. (56) Just at this moment teach me in brief, O lord, the knowledge capable of cutting asunder the bondages of the world. (57) Like an affectionate son as he was, the virtuous and kind hearted Rāma said to his mother who was dilapidated due to the old age but quite auspicious and who spoke the dispassionate words. (58) In an ancient time I taught three paths for attaining Mokṣa-Karmayoga, Jñānayoga and Bhaktiyoga. All of them are eternal. (59) O mother, Bhakti is of three types in accordance of the three Guṇas. According to one's own nature, will be one's Bhakti. (60) One who adores me with the intention to injure somebody, snobbery or jealousy and who is unable to feel the unity among all is known as Tāmasa Bhakta. (61) One who adores me with the desire for fruits, for enjoyment or wealth or fame is Rājasa. (62) One who adores me regarding himself as different from me, does

Karma dedicating to me (the supreme) or else for destroying his sins or does it with the spirit of duty, is known as Sāttvika. (63) Just as the waters of Gaṅgā merge in the ocean, similarly when the thought process is constantly dwelt upon me who am the substratum of all good qualities, contemplating on my divine qualities; that is the characteristic of my Nirguṇa Bhakti (devotion to my attributeless form). The devotion without any selfish motive and constant when developed, can provide all the four types of Mokṣa-Sālokya, Sāmīpya, Sārṣṭi and Sāyujya. Yet even though granted to them they refuse to accept it. They want only rendering service to me. (64–66) O lady, that is the supreme Yoga of the path of devotion. Through this my devotee crossing the mire of three Guṇas of Māyā becomes Me itself. (67) Being perfectly desireless, strictly observing one's own Dharma and practising praiseworthy Karmayoga completely devoid of any type of violence. (68) With my vision, praising and adoring me, remembering and saluting me, regarding every living being as my manifestation through holy company and giving up all sorts of falsehood. (69) Giving due respect to great persons, feeling compassionate to afflicted persons, developing friendship with the equals and observing rules of Yama etc. (70) Hearing Vedantic discourses, chanting my name, attending holy company, maintaining steadfastness and abandoning all egoistic feelings. (71) Eagerness to following my Dharma (Bhāgavata Dharma), having the inner senses purified, always hearing my qualities and pastimes, the devotee attains me soon (72) Just as the smell wafted by wind from its source enters into the nostrils similarly the Citta absorbed in practising Yoga merges into Ātmā. (73) In all living beings I am seated as Ātmā. O mother, not knowing this fact the fools insist for worshipping me in the outer objects like gross image etc. (74) Mother, I am not at all propitiated by offering so many things produced by effortful activities. Even if somebody contemptuously treats the other beings, (and worships me) really speaking I am not at all worshipped. (75) One should adore me in the form of my images through his bodily actions until he feels in his heart that it is I who am pervading all creatures. (76) There is always fear of death (spiritual degeneration) for who discriminates between his own self and the others, there is no doubt. (77) Therefore a non-discriminating devotee must adore me in all beings who are limited manifestations of mine, with a knowledge, respect and friendship. He should do this all indiscriminately. (78) So, a wise man should mentally salute day and night all beings feeling that they are all pervaded by my conscious self in the form of Jīva. (79) Therefore he should never entertain the idea of difference between Īśvara and Jīva. In this way O mother, I have narrated Jñānayoga and Bhaktiyoga. (80) Any person adopting anyone of the two Yogas, attains his ultimate good.

Therefore O mother, following Bhaktiyoga either see me seated in every heart or else remember me always as your own son. You will get peace. Hearing such words of Rāma Kausalyā felt blissful. (81-82) Thereafter meditating on Rāma always in her heart, cutting asunder the bondages of the world, crossing all the three states she attained the supreme abode. (83) Kaikeyī also had already adopted and assimilated the Yoga taught by Śrī Rāma. She was quite tranquil due to her faith and devotion. She meditated upon Śrī Rāma and when died she went to the heaven followed by an effulgence and there alongwith Daśaratha she stayed in a happy mood. The mother of Śrī Lakṣmaṇa with her exceptionally pure heart attained the proximity of her husband. (84)

two cities. (1-2) He coronated his two sons—Puṣkara in Pushkaravati and Takṣa in Takshashila. He provided them plenty of riches and friendly people. (3) Then he came back and dedicated himself in the service of Rāma. Then the propitiated Rāma one day affectionately said to Lakṣmaṇa. (4) O Lakṣmaṇa, take these two Kumāras—Aṅgada and Citraketu, go to the western quarter, conquer there the wicked Bhillas (wild tribes) who always do harm to all. (5) Establish there two cities and coronate the two mighty and valorous ones with a good supply of elephants, horses, riches and gems. (6) After coronating your two sons come back soon to me. In compliance with the orders of Rāma Lakṣmaṇa alongwith the army consisting of elephants, horses and infantry, went there; killed all the enemies, coronated his two sons, then came back and dedicated himself to the service of Rāma. (7-8)

After a lapse of long time while Rāma was always following the path of Dharma, one day Kāla (the spirit of death) came in the guise of a Rṣi and said to Lakṣmaṇa. (9) O wise one, please go and submit to your emperor Rāma, the supreme person that I, a messenger from Atibala, have come with a desire to see him. What that great Maharṣi has to say to Rāma, may require quite a considerable time. (10) Having heard his words Lakṣmaṇa informed Rāma without any delay about the arrival of the ascetic. (11) After Lakṣmaṇa said so Rāghava spoke—"Immediately bring that Muni in with due respect." (12) "Very well" said Lakṣmaṇa and brought that ascetic in, who was ejecting flames of his splendour like a burning fire after having ghee poured in. (13) That ascetic shining with his effulgence came to Śrī Rāma and in a sweet tone blessed him to be more and more prosperous. (14) Rāma adored that ascetic in a proper way and then asked about his well-being which was aptly reciprocated by the ascetic. (15) Sitting on a divine throne Rāma said to that ascetic—"Please tell me the purpose of your visit." (16) Inspired by Rāma the Muni said—"Let what I say be confined between you and me. (17) It should not reach the ears of anyone nor should it be communicated to anybody else. So if anybody hears the words or looks at us must be killed by you O lord." (18)

Rāma promised to do so and said to Lakṣmaṇa—"Better you stay at the gate and allow no body to come to this secluded place. (19) Whosoever will come here, I will kill him, there is no doubt. Then he addressed the Muni—now tell me who has sent you and what your purpose is. Then Muni said—O Rāma, now hear the reality which I am going to tell you. foe I am the eldest son of yours. (22) O brave one, I was born of the communion of Māyā with you and am known as all vanquishing Kāla. Lord Brahmā who is adored by all godly Rṣis has communicated to you that O wisest of the wise, now it is the time for you to protect heaven. In the time of yore when you dissolved all the universe with your Māyā, you remained alone by yourself. (23-24) Then from your spouse Māyā first of all you procreated me as your son and Ananta the hooded snake who always sleeps in the water. (25) Then after creating me you killed two strong and valorous demons Madhu and Kaiṭabha and with their fat and bones you made this earth O best among the persons. Then you created from your navel region a lotus effulgent like sun and in that lotus you created me. (26-27) You made me Prajāpati and entrusted the responsibility of creating the universe. O lord of the world when I took the charge I requested you to protect my creation from those who try to destroy it. Then you the Viṣṇu took birth as Vāmana from Kaśyapa. (28-29) You removed the burden of the earth by annihilating the Rākṣasas. Even now when all my creation was on the verge of destruction O holder of the earth, you came to this mortal world with the intention to kill Rāvaṇa. In the time of yore you prescribed the limit of your earthly sojourn with the gods to be eleven thousand years. Now your life in your human coil and your purpose also are complete. (30-32) Now Kāla in the form of an ascetic has come to you. If you intend to rule the kingdom for some more time, let it be so. Blessings to you. This much Brahmā said to you. If you feel like going to Vaikuṇṭha O conquerer of the senses, let the gods be carefree by having you amidst them as their protector. Hearing those words of Brahmā communicated by Kāla Rāma smiled and said to the death—I heard what you said. That is exactly what I wished. (33-36) I am pleased with your arrival. I get myself embodied only for the welfare of all the three worlds. (37) "Blessings to you" I will come back from where I came here. My purpose has been fulfilled. There is no reason to have a second thought. (38) The gods are my servants. In all their functions I must stand with my Māyā, O son, as the Prajāpati so aptly said. (39)

While they were conversing, the Muni Durvāsā came in the meantime at the gate of Śrī Rāma with the purpose of seeing Him immediately. (40) The Muni Durvāsā said to Lakṣmaṇa—"Let me see Rāma at once as it is very urgent." (41) Hearing so Lakṣmaṇa enquired of Durvāsā who was effulgent like burning fire—"What is your purpose with Rāma. Please express your desire. I will do it. (42) The king is busy in something else, please wait for a moment." Hearing that the furiously enraged Muni said to Lakṣmaṇa—(43) O Lakṣmaṇa, if you do not let me see the lord right now, I will burn Rāma, his kingdom and the progeny to ashes there is no doubt." (44) Hearing those extremely dreadful words of Durvāsā Lakṣmaṇa thought over the purport and nature of what he said. (45) If everything is going to be destroyed due to the fault of one man, it is better that I alone should die. Having so decided Lakṣmaṇa approached Rāma and said. (46) Hearing the words of Lakṣmaṇa Rāma saw the Kāla off. Rāma also came out and met Durvāsā, the son of Atri. (47) Rāma happily saluted the Muni and asked respectfully—"What should I do for you" enquired Śrī Rāma. (48) Hearing the words of Rāma Durvāsā said to him—"Today ends my fast for one thousand years. (49) Therefore, O best among the Raghus, I would like to have whatever food is ready. Rāma hearing the words of Muni was very much pleased. (50) Rāma served cooked food to the Muni as desired by him and the Muni enjoyed it like nectar to his fullest satisfaction and went away. (51)

After Durvāsā has left, Rāma recollected what Kāla had said. He was pained with sorrow; perturbed and looking absent-minded. (52) With his downcast eyes looking miserable he could not utter anything as he thought of Lakṣmaṇa to be almost dead. (53) The overlord was absolutely silent with his head bent downwards. Lakṣmaṇa watching Rāma so miserable, quite mum and thoughtful and condemning the chords of affection said—"O delighter of Raghus, do not torture yourself on my account. (54-55) I already knew the arrival of Kāla and knew exactly what was going to happen O lord. I am bound for hell if you have somehow to break your vow. (56) If you love me and if you feel like obliging me, do not have any second thought. Leave me but do not abandon your Dharma. (57) Rāma was greatly moved by what Lakṣmaṇa said. He summoned all his ministers and Guru Vasiṣṭha and said. (58) The lord narrated everything to them how Durvāsā came, what Kāla told and how he vowed. (59) After hearing Rāma's words all counsellors including the priest submitted with folded hands to Rāma who could effortlessly do anything. (60)

O lord, it was predestined that you who remove the burden of earth, will be separated from Lakṣmaṇa. I know it through my eyes of wisdom. (61) Desert Lakṣmaṇa at once but do not break your vow, O lord. If the vow is broken, the Dharma becomes quite fruitless. (62) When the Dharma is destroyed all the three worlds certainly perish. O best among the Raghus, you are the sustainer of all the worlds. (63) You behave to protect the three worlds at the cost of single Lakṣmaṇa. Rāma heard their utterances supporting Dharma and Artha, quite praiseworthy in the court and asked Lakṣmaṇa immediately—"Lakṣmaṇa, go wherever you please. Let the Dharma not be risked. (64-65) Shunning and killing both are equal to righteous persons." After Rāma said so, Lakṣmaṇa with pitiable sorrowful eyes bade Praṇāma to Śrī Rāma and came to his mansion. From there he came to the banks of Sarayū. He folded his hands, sipped some water he fully controlled all the nine bodily gates, held the vital air in his head (Brahmarandhra). Then he meditated upon the imperishable and immutable truth called Vāsudeva, in his heart. When Lakṣmaṇa held his vital airs, all the Rṣis, fire god and all other gods showered flowers on him and sang his praises. At this very time while even the gods could not see, Indra took Lakṣmaṇa with his mortal body and carried him to heaven. Then having seen Lakṣmaṇa, the one fourth of Viṣṇu, all gods and godly sages adored him. (66-71) When Lakṣmaṇa reached the heaven then came Brahmā alongwith the inhabitants of Siddhaloka and all the Yogīs to see Lakṣmaṇa, the incarnation of the great snake. (72)

Śrī Mahādeva said—After abandoning Lakṣmaṇa Rāma was extremely pained. He said to his counsellors, those expert in Vedic lore and Vasiṣṭha, the Guru. (1) I will consecrate Bharata today itself on the throne and follow the foot prints of Lakṣmaṇa. (2) After Rāma said so the citizens of the capital and the country as well were shocked by pain and fell down like the tree whose trunk has been cut. (3) Bharata also heard what Rāma said and got in a swoon. He condemned the kingdom and said to Rāma. (4) I swear by truth O lord, that separated from you I do not desire any kingdom either on earth or in the heaven. I swear by your feet. (5) Here are Kuśa and Lava, O king Rāma, coronate them—Kuśa in Kosala and Lava in Uttara. (6) Let the messengers go to fetch Śatrughna so that he also may know that we are departing for heaven. (7) Having heard Bharata and looking at him all citizens fell down on the earth apprehending the separation from Rāma. (8) The Guru Vasiṣṭha spoke to Rāma in a very soft voice—"Look dear, all subjects have fallen on the ground on account of veneration for you. (9) Have consideration for their feelings O Rāma, and be kind to them. Hearing the words of Vasiṣṭha Rāma raised them from the ground and cajoled them with due respect. (10) The affectionate Rāma asked them—"What should I do?" Then the citizens with folded hands submitted to Rāma with devotion. (11)

We want to follow you wherever you go. In it lies our supreme happiness and this is our imperishable Dharma. (12) O Rāma, we have firm determination to follow you. We have decided to follow you with our sons and wives wherever you go—whether a Tapovana (a grove for penance), heaven or the town. Realising their determination and remembering the words of Kāla Rāghava gave those devotee citizens, his approval. The lord Rāma having so decided, that very day despatched Kuśa and Lava to their respective capitals, giving each of the two eight thousand chariots, one thousand elephants and sixty thousand horses as their army. He gave them the huge amount of gems, riches and strong healthy men as their escorts. (13—17) Kuśa and Lava saluted Rāma and with great difficulty they departed. This side Rāghava sent messengers to fetch Śatrughna. (18) Those messengers swiftly went there and reported to Śatrughna the arrival of Kāla, the action of Durvāsā, passing away of Lakṣmaṇa, the vow of Rāma and the coronating of sons—everything and what Rāma intended to

do. (19-20) Hearing those words of the messengers in regard to the destruction of family, Śatrughna even though pained yet he patiently summoned his two sons immediately. He coronated Subāhu in Mathura and Yūpaketu in Vidiśā. Then Śatrughna himself went immediately to Ayodhya with a desire to see Rāma. (21-22)

There he saw the great souled Rāma like fire-god in effulgence, wearing two garments and surrounded by the immortal Ṛṣis. (23) Saluting Rāma, the lord of Lakṣmī, the best of Raghus, the wise Śatrughna said what was supported by Dharma, with his hands folded. (24) I have consecrated my sons on the throne O lotus-eyed king. Kindly know that I am determined to follow you. (25) You do not behove to shun me, O brave, particularly when I am your devotee. Śrī Rāma knowing the firm determination of Śatrughna asked him to get ready by the noon. In the meantime innumerable monkeys capable of assuming any form, the bears, the Rākṣasas, the Gopucchas thousands in number appeared from nowhere. They were all the sons of gods and Ṛṣis. They heard the desire of Rāma to finally depart and all the monkeys and Rākṣasas requested Śrī Rāma that they also decided to go along with him. (26-29) By that time the mighty Sugrīva also arrived and properly saluting Rāma, the lover of devotees, said (30) "I have come after consecrating Aṅgada on the throne and I am determined to accompany you." (31) Hearing this strong proclamation of bears, monkeys and ogres Śrī Rāma softly spoke to Vibhīṣaṇa with due respect. (32) So long as the earth is inhabited by the living beings till then you rule over the Rākṣasa kingdom. I swear you by my ownself. (33) You should not argue anything against my arrangement. Having so said to Vibhīṣaṇa now he turned to Hanumān. (34) Hanumān, live long. Don't overrule my orders and then he said to Jāmbavanta to stay till the end of Dwāpara. (35) There would be a fight between you and me for some reason." Then Rāghava out of his compassion, asked the bears, ogres and monkeys to accompany him. (36)

The next day early in the morning Śrī Rāma, the broad chested and eyes like white lotus, requested the priest, the exalted Vasiṣṭha—"Let the Agnihotra go ahead of me. (37) Then Vasiṣṭha performed all ritualistic acts in meticulously prescribed manner. Śrī Rāma in silken garments, holding Pavitrī of Kuśa in his hand, having decided for his final departure, came out of the city. He, resplendent like crores of moons, looked like moon coming out of white clouds. Having big lotus like eyes Lakṣmī was in his left side holding white lotus in her hand. (38-39) To his right side went Bhūdevī, effulgent and of black hue. All the Śāstras, his weapons, bow and arrows went ahead of him in their embodied form. (40) All the Vedas assumed bodies and went alongwith all divine Munis. Praṇava and Gāyatrī, the mother of all the Vedas alongwith Vyāhṛtis accompanied Śrī Hari. (41) After Rāma started, all the inhabitants of Ayodhya with their sons, wives and relatives followed. (They were happy) as if they might have had all their desires fulfilled and were going towards the open gate of Mokṣa. Then followed Śatrughna and Bharata with their wives, domestic servants and the entire gynaeceum. (42)

When the citizens saw Rāma coming with Lakṣmī, they, keeping the Brāhmaṇas ahead, followed—all young and old. Then came all Brāhmaṇas alongwith the ministers. (43) Then happily followed the Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, Sūdras and the other outcastes like pariah. Then came monkeys headed by Sugrīva sounding auspiciously having them purified after bathing. (44) None out of them suffered from any worldly sorrow, miserable or indulged in any outer objects of pleasure. They all were followers of Rāma, the Bliss in person, they were all detached from the world and they went with Rāma with their servants and even domestic animals. (45) Whatever creatures were there beyond the vision of human eyes—mobiles or immobiles they all were dispassionate and they went with Rāma of unimaginable prowess, Pāramātmā in person, the only ruler of the universe. (46) There was no creature in Ayodhya who was not mentally merged in Rāma. After the departure of king Rāma the entire Ayodhya became empty. (47)

When they covered a considerable distance from the town Rāma was happy to see the sacred river Sarayū which originated from the eyes of lord Viṣṇu. The lord Rāma whose remembrance sanctifies everyone visualised the entire universe—space and time—everything in his heart. (48) At that time came the great Brahmā, all gods, Rṣis and Siddhas. The limitless sky was packed to the capacity with the planes occupied by gods. (49) When the sunbeams fell on those planes they refracted the light and the sky was flooded with light. Apart from this the intermediary region was filled with self-luminous divine persons who were best among the virtuous and greater than the greatest of Mahātmās (50) The fragrant breezes blew. The sky rained flowers. The Mṛdangas beaten by gods sounded and sang the *Vidyādhara*s and Kinnaras. (51) Rāma of the immeasurable prowess touching once the waters of Sarayū with his feet made the circumambulation. Then Brahmā with his hands folded said to Rāma—"O Paramātmā, you are the supreme lord Viṣṇu, always blissful and perfect. You alone know your own lordly form and nature. Yet you fulfil my solicitations—I, who am your servant. O learned one, you always care for your devotees. (52-53) O lord, now you alongwith your brothers, coming back in your original Viṣṇu form protect gods or else if you prefer any other form; assume it but protect us. (54) You are Viṣṇu the lord of gods. Apart from me nobody else knows you. My salutations to you thousands and thousands of times. O super lord, be propitiated; salutations to you again. (55)

Acceding to the request from Brahmā the profusely luminous Rāma assumed his four-armed form before the very eyes of gods and blinded them with his dazzling splendour. (56) Lakṣmaṇa transformed himself into wondrously hooded Śeṣa, the bed of lord Viṣṇu similarly Bharata, the son of Kaikeyī and Śatrughna, the killer of Lavaṇa became disc and conch respectively. (57) Sītā became Lakṣmī as usual and Rāma was already lord Viṣṇu, the primal person. They discorded their earthly coil and adopted luminous and divine form. (58) After that the gods like Indra, Siddhas, Munis, Yakṣas and Prajāpatis like Brahmā surrounded lord Viṣṇu and started adoring and praising through hymns and they rejoiced as their wishes were materialised. Then the lord Viṣṇu said to Brahmā—"These are all my devotees and have intense love for me. (59-60) They also want to go to Vaikuṇṭha alongwith me. Even the subhumans of these are supremely pious. Let them also attain the abodes just equal to Vaikuṇṭha. These are my orders that, you make necessary arrangements to make their entry there. (61) Having heard the lord, Brahmā said—"Let these devotees of yours, and full of wonderful enjoyables, higher than that of mine. (62)

O Rāma, let the others also who remember your sacred name at the time of death or who adore you even unknowingly attain the same abodes which the Yogīs reach. (63) All the monkeys and Rākṣasas etc., were immensely pleased. They touched the water and discarded their mortal bodies. They again assumed their previous form from whose fraction they had become bears and monkeys. (64) Since Sugrīva was born from the sun god so he was unified with him and then all men and women immersing themselves in Sarayū water deserted their human bodies, mounted on the divine planes divinely ornamented attained the Sāntānika Lokas. Those subhumans also as seen by Rāma entered into the water and went to heaven. (65-66) The countrymen also who were there as spectators, having the vision of Rāma gave up their attachment for the world and while remembering Paramātmā lord Viṣṇu touched the water and easily went to heaven. (67) Lord Mahādeva said only this much the remaining part of the Rāmakathā. Who recites only a fourth of a verse of this, he will be freed from the sins accumulated during one thousand earlier lives. (68) One who commits sins day and night, if recites with devotion only one Śloka; all his accumulated sins are destroyed and he gets Sālokyamukti which is unobtainable for others. (69) This story of Rāma in which only his future, pastimes are narrated was composed first of all by lord Mahādeva inspired by Śrī Rāma himself. Śrī Rāma is immensely pleased to hear this. (70)

This poetic work named Rāmāyaṇa, giver of illimitable virtuous fruits, was narrated by lord Śiva to Goddess Bhawānī. Whosoever recites or hears it, is freed from sins incurred during hundreds of past lives. (71) Excessively pleased Śrī Rāma with Śrī Sītā always remains with him and makes him more prosperous who recites this Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa or hears it everyday or scribbles it with exclusive devotion. (72) Whosoever recites or hears daily with devotion this Rāmāyaṇa praised by the superior gods like Brahmā etc., which is able to enchant the minds of people, he assumes a pure body and reaches the abode of Viṣṇu. (73)

Thus ends canto IX of Uttarakāṇḍa in Śrīmadadhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, a dialogue between Umā and Maheśwara.

The ruler of Ayodhya and the princess of Mithila; the ornamentation of Raghus and that of the Videhas. (1) The illumining light of Raghus and Nimis; born in the solar and lunar dynasty respectively. (2) The eldest son of Daśaratha and the daughter of king Janaka; followers of social norms taught by Vasiṣṭha and Śātānanda. (3) Born of Kausalyā's womb and coming out of Vedī; eyes big like Pundarīka and eyes like blooming Indīvara. (4) The lotus-face like Candrakānta and the face-like lunar disc; the walking style—like elephant and female goose. (5) Arms besmeared with sandal and the breast with Kuṅkuma; the lotus hands having bow and lotus flower respectively. (6) Protection of refugees and graceful to the saluting ones; cloud black and golden hued; seated on divine throne and clad and bedecked divinely. (7) Always eager to look each other; both a suitable match mutually; the householding couple with the universe as the home. I pay obeisance to the two and feel blessed. (8) Let the two enhance his virtues, fulfiller of desires, who praises the two devotedly with this hymn. (9) The sacred Stotra of Śrī Rāma and Sītā is the instant giver of Mokṣa. He who recites it in the morning after leaving bed, gets his desires fulfilled. (10)

Thus ends the Stotra of Rāma and Jānakī composed by Śrī Hanumān.
